nilding enthusiasm, Vikings show their spirit at a nini pep rally. The excitement generated at noments such as this helped make them nforgettable to many students.

All in all, the time spent at Lamar was brief. . .

. . . three short years. Where did it all go? What did we accomplish?

When we stop to reflect upon it, we accomplished a lot. For everyone, the memories are different. However, for the school as a whole, many of the moments we will cherish are the same.

We will remember our wins - and our losses. We will relive the excitement of victory and the warmth that ran through the crowd every time the Alma Mater was played.

Most of us will never forget being defeated by L.D. Bell on Homecoming or the day that McDonald's closed because of the Lamar-Arlington food fight. We will remember, too, the chants of "We Believe" and "Get a Colt" echoing through the gym during pep rallies.

For some, the memories will be different. Band members will remember the thrill of receiving straight ones at both UIL and Cleburne contests. Choir and drama students will always recall the hard work and cooperation that it took to produce "Anything Goes" and "You Can't Take it with You".

Of course, not only will we remember the big events, but the little things, too.

Getting your driver's license - at last, having friends over just to gossip or being surprised on your birthday with flowers and balloons. After all, it's not the monotonous note-taking and the grueling tests we will recall, it will be the . . .

Starting the performance, drum majors Robert Woelfel, Astrid Broekhuizen, Jim Norcross and Susie Warden salute the audience. At the close of the season, each member of the band had experienced the thrill of receiving superior ratings at UIL and Cleburne contests.

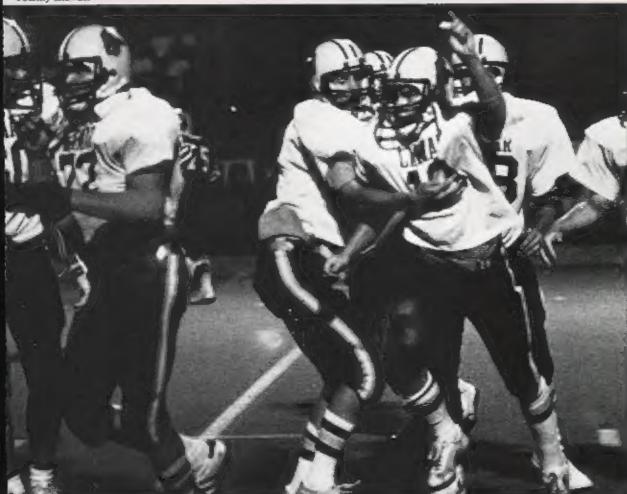

Watching the game, James Hanes and date Janine Drake enjoy Homecoming night. Because of a broken water pipe at Cravens Field, the game was moved to UTA at the last minute, an unexpected and unforgettable change.

Great Moments

Breaking the poster, the Vikings run onto the field after halftime. Not only the football team was involved in the games as the drill team, band and even the spectators participated every Friday.

Patting him on the back, teammates congratulate Jason Watson on an outstanding play. To many athletes, the satisfaction of winning or even just scoring made all the grueling practices seem worthwhile.

Chanting, seniors take part in a class yell. Pep rallies were, for some, the highlight of the entire football season.

Eric Smokler

Gathered around the table, the cast of "You Can't Take it with You" discusses the family's troubles. Although a production such as this took many long hours to produce, the resulting satisfaction and camaraderic often made everything worthwhile.

Cleaning up, Kris Moritz helps take down posters after a pep rally. Being a part of a team or organization gave many students a chance to make strong and lasting friendships.

Little things mean a lot

What was it that made our days so special? A day hardly went by that we didn't have something to talk about. Whether it concerned who was dating who or what so-and-so did over the weekend - there was always something to gossip about.

Remember the seniors' Homecoming Hall? Or the time that the guys were the "girls" at the pep rally? And the messages left by Arlington High hoodlums on our back wall? These are the things we will remember.

Sometimes, just one little thing made the whole day worthwhile. It might have been being complimented on a new outfit or saying "Hi" to that cute girl in algebra or hearing your name on the announcements (usually mispronounced).

Remember the new haircuts that every one sported throughout the year? And the fashions? And what about all of those fads - New Wave, Valley Talk and Prep (which was already beginning to fade).

How about your first real car date? Guys - remember how nervous you were the first time you had to meet her parents? And girls - do you recall sitting in the car wondering, "Is he going to open the door for me? Or should I go ahead and get out on my own?"

All too often we were told by our parents
- "These are the best times of your life."

"Oh, c'mon! If this is as good as it gets. . ."

But later, when we do stop to reflect, these really will add up to be great moments.

Dina Burton

Trying on hats, Donna Schumann and Anne Armstrong shop for Christmas gifts at the mall. One of the many things that most people will remember about Lamar is the good times shared between friends, whether in school or out.

Raising her glass, Karen McClintic proposes a toast to field trips during a trip with Honors English IV class to the Fort Worth Botanical Gardens. Excursions such as this, whether to Cleburne or Washington D.C. were a welcome change to routine classwork.

Listening intently, Steve Taylor sits quietly through the Sophomore Assembly. The assembly taught the newcomers the ropes of the school.

Showing their new, faces, Larry Launders and Peter Grieser dress up for the Homecoming pep rally which was close to Halloween. Costumes and other weird outfits were often worn at the pep rallies.

SIUDENIURE

Activities are fun-damental

Pep rallies, Homecoming, first and last day of school - all were among great moments in student life, moments to be. forever remembered and shared.

Most were choosy when selecting what they thought to be earth-shaking events, a startling as regularity. These in less naming only a few. A date with the "right". person for Homecoming or the promigraduation and an unexpected good grade on a test were highlights for some. The while these students certainly won't teachers' E.T. skit for Halloween, remember each and every one of these

For many, great moments arose with discriminating souls considered no homework days and 3:25 on Friday afternoons inomentous occasions. And days individually, as a whole they were thought of with fondness.

Afterall, who didn't have a touch of melancholy on Monday mornings or on evenings stuck at home with homework insix subjects...

So, to-each-his-own great moments, were pleasures to be filled away in the memory, to be savored at some later datemuch as they were when they occurred.

First things first

All dressed up, no place to go

On Aug. 30, the halls of Lamar High School suddenly became filled with 1800 students searching for their rooms and wandering around the building looking for old friends.

Lounging around the pool, 'hanging out' and watching "All My Children" on TV would be activities of the past for another nine months.

During the five minutes between classes, sophomores wandered about hoping to find their next class before the bell rang.

The halls were congested with the sight of starched new clothes, haircuts and bright smiles.

As the last class of the day came, students' minds were already wandering off to what they were going to do that night, or what they were going to wear tomorrow just as if it were an ordinary school day.

Only 174 more to go . . .

Carrying his books, James Dierks saunters to class. Five minutes was provided between each period to report to class on time.

Resting after a heetic first day, teachers take it easy in the workroom. The lounge gave the teachers a chance to grade papers and to discuss the problems of the classroom

Sitting in class, students and teachers get aquainted on the first day of school. At this time, most teachers told the students what they would be doing throughout the year

'Sum'mer adds up to fun

June, July, August bring the good with the bad

As students crowded back into school, you could hear the most asked question, "What did you do during the summer?" When walking into a room, a person could see students telling each other about their own adventures during the three month vacation.

Summer activities included working, going on vacation, and attending workshops and symposiums.

Favorite places to work included White Water, Wild Life Park, Arlington Stadium and the ever-popular, Six Flags. Vacations ranged as far away as Hawaii and Europe.

One student talked about her first time in Hawaii and the excitement she experienced by swimming, sailing, and snorkeling in the ocean. Vacations were also as close as South Padre and Galveston. These were always popular summer vacation spots for soaking up some sun. Some journalism students attended the workshop at Mountain View College in Dallas. Jun Norcross attended the Energy Symposium at the University of Texas at Austin.

Other workshops were the Honors Colloquim at UT and Insignis Program at the University of Texas at Arlington.

Braniff Airlines went out of business, on May 12, 1982. The airline's shut-down meant that 9,000 employees had to look for other jobs during the summer. Some employees were lucky enough to be hired by other airlines.

This was also the first year that the Texas Cliffhanger at Six Flags and White Water were opened. Many people said that the Cliffhanger ride was great but too short and the line was too long. White Water was another attraction that the summer brought. White Water was a summer hideaway. Many students purchased season a pass, as the single day ticket was $8.95.

The Falkland Islands War broke out on April 2 when Argentina took over the islands owned by Britain. The war finally ended in late June with Britain retaking the Falkland Islands. The war marked a time of furious and destructive naval and air fighting. Probably one of the important aspects of this war was that both sides got to try out their war plans that before had only been on paper.

Practicing for the Pac-Man routine, Rachel Bright and the rest of the drill team get ready to perform their act. Drill team started practicing as early as August to get ready for the football season.

Showing off their sand castle, Stephame Ervin, Suzic Evans, Jessica Grimes and friend enjoy a trip to Galveston. The beaches were usually crowded with summer vacationers.

Earning a few extra bucks, Doug Miller works at Six Flags during the summer. Starting pay at Six Flags was $3.25

Cooling off, Jodi Trammell and Astrid Brockhuizen find something fun to do by going for a swim. Many people went to White Water to get wel instead of swimming at their own backyards.

Marching in the summer heat, Jeanette Taylor, Jame Barnett and Kim Bradley get in a little practice before the footbail games start. The marching band began relicarsing on Aug. 7 to perfect routines.

Radio's got New Waves

Students choose to adopt new, different lifestyles

High top tennis shoes, mini skirts, strange geometric designs, missing sleeves, wild color combinations, bizarre haircuts, polka dots and the ever-present buttons were a few of the accounterments of the latest fad in town-New Wave.

This new way of life slowly crept into society during the summer. As school started again, many were surprised at the changes in their friends. Some guys sported the latest in haircuts - very short on top, gradually growing longer and flipping out at the nape of the neck.

Many radio stations also began playing the music students wanted to hear - The Clash, Missing Persons, The Waitresses, Adam Ant, Men at Work, Talk-Talk, Elvis Costello, Haircut One Hundred and so on. Foremost was KEGL with its "Rock of the '80s . . . the New Music Hour."

One complaint of many New Wavers was that they were misunderstood. "There's a BIG difference between Punk And New Wave," explained junior Matt Krzysiak." If I came to school wearing an old Izod with no collar, no alligator, razor blade slashes, safety pins and jeans that looked like I had dragged them behind my car for a week . . . THAT would be punk."

So the main difference between the two was the fact that New Wave wasn't as extreme as Punk. Punkers would go to any length - wearing torn clothing, lots of leather and metal (especially chains), mohawks and even inflicting pain upon themselves and others.

New Wavers were less radical. They sprang mostly from those who liked a type of music that was just. . . different. New Wave gave people a chance to express themselves in new and different ways - pink and purple with stripes and polka dots. It was a way for people to let go and allow their more-daring side to show.

Some preferred to suck to their polos and khakis, though and just hold out until it all blew over. One person even claimed that "it's just a phase they're going through. They'll get over it."

But something must be said for those who were "into" punk, long before it was the fashion. Because as they say, old punkers never die, they just get stranger and stranger and . . .

Jump far to fall

School brings many attractions

Fall brought the school bell's first ring, annual events and new happenings.

This fall introduced new computer report cards. The new print outs included, academic grade, citizenship grade and current grade point average.

Wednesday morning club meetings and club sales began. The Senior Class held its annual magazine sale.

The State Fair of Texas was Oct. 5-23. Since no fair day was granted for Tarrant County, many students went on weekends.

Class tests - CAT, DAT, and semor film, "Victory," were Nov. 4th. On this day, juniors and sophomores reported to testing stations and for a bonus got an extra-long lunch period.

Then the big game against L.D. Bell ended the Vikings' chance at the championships.

Taking advantage of autumn weather, Mark Pointer and Rebe Bryant walk around outside Students had their choice to stay on campus or leave for the 55-minute lunch.

Motivation speaker, Mark Sharenbroich, brings laughter unto the crowd, as he speaks of teenage high school life. This was the first all-school assembly and was held in the gym on Sept. 16.

In the locker room, Mike Waters, Teds Brown and Brent McLendon prepare for the pep rally. For 10 weeks, Finday morning classes were cut short for pep rallies.

Waiting in line, juntors Rachel Bright and Nancy Ruggiero get ready to buy movie tickets. Some of the more popular movies were Rocky III, Poltergist and E.T. others considered it dull and aggravation. The topic is work, not homework, but employment. Many students took on weekend jobs or certain responsibilities around the house.

On Friday nights, most showed up to support their favorite football team. After football season most liked to catch a movie, find a party or go out to dinner.

Ah... Saturday, at last, the one day to sleep late, go shopping, or watch a little television in bed. But, then too, there were students who had to get up early for extra activities, such as sports.

Then there was Sunday, and the traditional pro-football game on T.V., however, due to the NFL players strike which began on Sept. 20, students had to find other things to occupy their time.

As sophomore Delisa Sullivan stated it, "The weekend is just a time to get away from it all and enjoy."

Before the camping trip, Lance Jones and friend want around for the rest of the group to arrive. Looking forward to ski trips, camping trips or just visiting with friends, made the school year seem to go faster.

During a busy weekend, Anne Armstrong, stops for a bite to cat at a local fast food restaurant. In between shopping, studying and work, this was a common occurrence for students in the weekend rush.

Making it shine, senior Karl Johnson, use a little elbow grease at Star Car Wash. Students could be found working all over Arlington in their spare time.

Spending time with money

Students feel the 'squeeze' from daily expenses

There's one thing that nobody wants to be short of having. You guessed it, money!

During the summer, most students worked to save every cent possible for their ideas of the necessities of life.

These included that new car, that stereo which would blow anybody away or that trip during Spring Break to go skiing or to Padre.

Well, as school started, it seemed the money they were saving began to disappear quickly.

Home, home on the reign

Homecoming week filled with various activities

What really is homecoming?

To senior Craig Cline, Homecoming was "a special event to share with someone you care a lot about." Junior Debbie Bailey said, "Homecoming provides many activities in which every student may be involved." However, senior Kolby Keeling answered, "a time to spend a lot of money!"

Students had different ideas, but all agreed that it was an exciting week!

During the week, homerooms competed against each other in spirit chain competition, buying links for 3 cents. Coach Mike Pringle's homeroom won with an average of $7 per person. The three classes also competed against each other in the traditional hall decorating contest. Breaking a senior winning streak, the juniors won with the theme of "Viking Dreamland."

Upon arriving at the pep rally, students found the gym overcrowded with the return of the exes. Many seniors appeared in children's Halloween costumes as their dress for the morning.

Teachers performed in a skit starring E.T. (alias Frau Ruth Buechlein) as the hero of the Vikings.

Finally the big night arrived! Because of a flooded Cravens Field, the game was changed to UTA. Students arrived at the football game dressed up and anxious for the evening to get going. At halftime, the homecoming court had its traditional march onto the field. Everyone listened closely as Kris Moritz was announced as the 1982 Homecoming queen. After the crowning was completed, the court marched off the field and the game continued. The Vikes, however, could not pull off a win, and lost the game 24-7 to L.D. Bell.

Most students went out to dinner and then on home, ending the week-long excitement of Homecoming.

Showered by confetti, Jeff Ballow, Matt Krzysiak, and Robert Frakes leave the gym after the pep rally. Some football players commented that there was an added pressure to win the Homecoming game since they were playing Bell, who was undefeated

Tonight Show

Here's Johnnyl for Lamar's Tonight

Show. The band sponsored the show which made approximately $150. Mr Bill Chester, said, "The crowd was what I expected since there was no Autumn Harvest." In past years, the Tonight Show was held in conjuction with the carnival

Overall, he felt it turned out pretty good aside from a few technical problems.

Susie Warden, a member of the Jazz Band, felt more students should have attended. Kevin Sherrill, this year's Johnny, commented that he was scared considering a lot of the program was ad lib.

You Can't Take it with You

You can't take it with you? Well on Oct. 3, 4, and 6 Ms. Sharie Bailey and the cast gave the audience their opinion. The main idea behind the story is that happiness is more important than money. Ms. Bailey commented "I felt the play went very well, and the kids did a great job." The cast spent about 32 hours a week practicing, yet profits were only about $200. Even though the crowd was not what was expected, the cast felt proud of what was accomplished. So, it's up to the audience to decide. Can you take it with you?

Preparing, Ms. Rowens Talisferro and the Choir Department rehearse the opening scene. Auditions were open to the whole school

I wanna tell you a story

Pep rallies: times of spirit, fun, encouragement

It was hot, notsy, crowded. Sound fun? You bet it was!

Although these discomforts were present at each pep rally, students endured them joyfully as they cheered their team on.

Pep rallies gave students the chance to go wild for at least 35 minutes while they showed their spirit.

Cheerleaders led organized cheers, students broke in with their own chants, and the football players took it all in Getting their carnations, the Vi-Queens take a breather after a pep rally. They performed many routines including ones to "Pac-Man Fever" and "Jailhouse Rock." calmly.

The band broke in with "Bud," "Cotton Fields" and other favorites. During these, the stands would rock and shake as students jumped and swayed with the beat of the music.

The chaos was broken up for a while by the speeches given by the coaches or administrators. These were highlighted by Coach Mike Pringle's "I wanna tell you a story," and Principal Weldon English's "What's the good word?"

Once again the crowd was stirred up.

Students climbed on one another's shoulders. They threw pom-pons up and down the bleachers. And with all the confetti that was thrown around, the chance of leaving the gym without some in your hair was slim.

Students and faculty alike got down with the Vikings and were as cold as they could be.

Suddenly, the shouts were hushed as the band played the Alma Mater.

Then the Friday morning activities came to a close as students swarmed down from the bleachers to form the traditional tunnel for the players.

Finally, out of breath and with flushed cheeks, students slowly poured out of the gym and made their way to their first period classes.

Of course the teachers wouldn't expect them to work, would they?

The good times

Arlington growing and changing

Have you taken a look around lately? No, did you really take a look around Did you notice anything? Arlington finally began to take on the air and appearance of a big city. New restaurants appeared, streets and highways were widened and improved and we even got our first real skyscrapers. (Rumor has it that someday we might even have a skyline)

More people than ever before began to utilize the 'mid-cities' alternative and settled in Arlington. This was evident in several ways. A fifth high school, Martin High School was opened in southwest Arlington to accommodate the growing student population of the city. The actual acreage of the city limits expanded to 80.2 square miles while the population increased by 19,077 people since 1980.

But with all of the prosperity that the growth brought, there was also a dark cloud. Unemployment rates in the city reached incredible levels making it somewhat difficult for Lamar students to find afternoon and summer jobs.

In spite of the hard times that loomed over the nation, Arlington remained a big name in recreation. Six Flags and Ranger Stadium kept the tourists coming, stimulating the construction of two major high-rise hotels.

Merchants in the city smiled at the incoming dollars while home owners tended to be a bit skeptical of the development and population boom. Be it good or bad, it seemed that '82 was the year everyone decided to go to Arlington, "For the Good Times."

Looking at the map, Donna Benvenuto. Joel Boone and Chad Bailey discuss the count.es around Arlugton. Population increased 19,077 since 1980.

Sitting quietly, Martin High School awaits the first students to run through its doors. Martin only enrolled sophomores and jumors for the '82-'83 school year.

Displaying various types of clothes, students try to stay in style with the coming and going of different looks. Fashions ranged from shiny apparel to western apparel.

If the shoe fits, 'wear it'

Vikings wear what they like, like what they wear

As the doors opened on Aug. 30 there was a whole different look to what was known as fashion. It was new and colorful

"It's nothing like I've ever seen before," said Scott Atwell.

"The new styles are OK but I wouldn't wear any of it," commented Peyton Moody.

People who wore these fashions could be broken down into two main groups: the daring and the not-so-daring.

The daring wore outfits like long sweatshirts with polka dots, colored tights and bright Mexican dresses.

The not-so-daring wore things such as jeans, T-shirts, polos and all types of western apparel including cowboy hats, long sleeved western shirts, woven belts, belt buckles, down vests and boots.

Whether students were daring or not, styles seemed to change every year. And, no doubt this year's duck-shoes and mini-skirts would probably sooner or later be stashed away among spiked heels, big bell jeans and go-go boots.

Showing off, Stephanie Ervin and Shelly Birdwell display the current fashions. Although these styles were not worn by all, some opted for this new look.

Acting punkish, Paul Anderson, Pete Grieser and John Cottraux exhibit the New Wave styles. This look consisted of shiny pants, slim ties, high top tennis shoes, punk glasses and buttons.

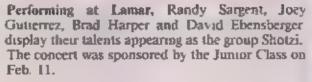

Acting out his part as Linus, Tommy Barrows performs in the musical "You're a Good Man Charlie Brown." Madrigals held this play on Jan. 21-22

Shining brightly, the Interlochen lights enhance the feeling of Christmas. Thousands of people admired the display of lights during the holiday.

'Hot' happenings

A winter full of many activities

Winter wasn't just a season for cold weather and warm clothes. It was a time for many events and activities.

The month of December started with College Night on Dec. 7. Students from all Arlington high schools attended sessions to inquire about different colleges.

On Dec. 16, the charity basketball game was played and the following day the faculty held its first Christmas breakfast at 7 a.m. Most everyone enjoyed their two-week Christmas vacation although it seemed to have lasted just a few days.

January soon arrived and so did the dreaded semester finals. Taking finals did have two advantages: early dismissal on Wednesday and Thursday and a three-day weekend.

FCA members spent their extra long weekend skiing in Purgatory, Colo. and Taos, NM.

The foreign language clubs organized a food-tasting party and dance on Jan. 28 Many students attended and disc jockeys were hired to provide the music.

February was a time for Theme Week as well as Valentine's Day. Carnations were sold in the cafeteria along with valograms for this special day.

Seniors also ordered their caps and gowns as Graduation edged closer.

Spring was soon on its way and this meant warmer weather and spring fever.

Kissing at the altar, Teresa Fenner and Kelly Chancelor participate in a mock wedding. The Home and Family Living classes performed a wedding at the end of each semester after studying different aspects of dating and personal relationships.

Student Council sponsors a week of fun and frolic

Theme week? No, not another English assignment! Instead it was a week of fun and games sponsored by the Student Council

Monday, Feb. 7 - After a few "whatcha cans and whatcha can'ts." Theme Week officially began in the cafeteria, alias the Slave Market. Any girl with 50 cents in her pocket and a desire in her heart could purchase a slave - all male volunteers - to be at her beck and call later in the week.

Tuesday, Feb. 8 - The day's main event resulted in an odd sight in the halls and classrooms. Headgear (which was normally forbidden) was worn by those who participated in Hat and Wig Day. There were decidedly more of the former which included everything from an Indian headdress to a sombrero. Also, those who were either too chicken or too cheap on Monday had a last chance to buy a slave.

Wednesday, Feb. 9 - Slave Day! The vassals reported to the library before school for orders, and anything went-well most anything. If a request was illegal, immoral, cost money or was against school policy, the deal was off. Slaves were seen juggling extra books and rushing to class (all the way across the building, of course) after delivering masters to their rooms.

Thursday, Feb. 10 - It looked like a scene from "Taps" (except for guns) or perhaps like half the student body had joined ROTC. It was Army Fatigues Day and George C. Scott's favorite color was well-represented.

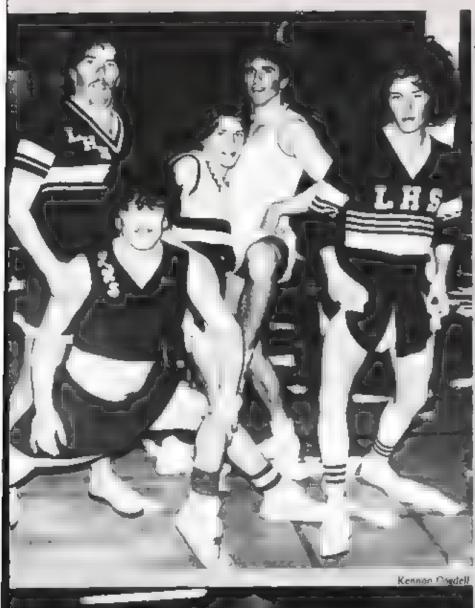

Friday, Feb. 11 - A big day! The Powder Puff pep raily bagan first thing in the morning with guy cheerleaders egging on the crowd. This boisterous affair became even more so when the Sexy Legs Contest got underway. Contestants were disguised, using the old paper-bagover-the-head-trick, to insure impartiality. Steve Fisher was the big winner. This was also Twirp Day, and some girls used the morning festivities to line up dates for the day. The grand finale began at 4 p.m. with the Powder Puff football game where junior and senior girls risked life and limb to battle for supremacy on the football field. The upperclassmen won 16-0, but could the senior referees have possibly lent a hand?

Most students enjoyed and participated in at least some aspects of the week's activities. At any rate, it seemed a welcome diversion to ease the winter doldrums while helping the Student Council raise money to buy smething for the school.

Exposing their legs, participants of the sexy legs contest are judged by the varsity cheerleaders. To prevent partiality the volunteers were masked with paper bags to hide their true identities.

Showing some bustle, sentor Connie Gallagher sprints around the end for a touchdown. The sentors went on to win the game, 16-0.

Treating him like a dog, Lisa Hall drags Jeff Duncan by the neck around the school. Slave day was one of the days the girls got to rule over the guys.

Decked out, sophomore Mike Stumbaugh dresses in army attire. Clothing ranged from MASH T-shirts to actual army fatigues.

Giving it all he's got, junior David Liston stretches over the hurdle. Along with track, baseball, soccer, tennis and golf were played in the spring.

Munching down, Spanish students scrounge around for their favorite dish. Tasting day was held in the spring during class and each student was required to bring a dish.

Representing the Journalism Department, senior Donnie Frazier writes at UIL District Competition Donnie placed third in feature writing at this contest and advanced to the regional and state contests.

Spring into fun

New season creates new do's

Green grass, bright flowers, beautiful butterflies and chirping birds were all typical signs of spring. But here it seemed to be something totally different.

It all started with the AFS assembly during which exchange students talked about their countries' traditions. They also met with history, psychology and foreign language classes throughout the day.

Sophomores ordered class rings while seniors ordered announcements and prepared for Graduation and Prom. Then there were elections for class office, club officers and Student Council.

Also, spring brought the annual HOE blood drive, cheerleader tryouts and the Drama Department's one act play "Thieves' Carnival"

Then something out-of-the-ordinary, two men that posed as Soviet personnel talked with history and psychology classes about the USSR. Students became angered and even offended when the men rudely disagreed with their opinions. But the next day, it was revealed they were U.S. army reserve members taking care of a two day service obligation to get students thinking about the USA.

Even though people eventually became inflicted with spring fever, most agreed it was a versatile season.

Modeling prom attire, Kristi Prince and Tommy Itius show off the new styles at the prom assembly. The assembly was held in the spring and also included advice on what type corsages to buy.

Discussing Soviet Policy, junior Joseph Lovins talks with a Soviet soldier. The following day, the two men were identified as U.S. Army reserve members on a two-day service obligation.

Different bands play alike music

Shotzi, Opus, The Staff. Could it be extra-terrestrials from another planet or strange beings from the mountains of Russia? No, instead they were rock groups that were organized by present and ex-Lamar students.

Shotzi had been together for one year and included David Ebensberger and Max Shumake both on guitar and vocals; Joey Guiterrez, lead vocal; Randy Sargent, bass and Brad Harper, drums. The band rehearsed in a private studio in North Arlington and played in clubs such as Savvys, The Carnival Club, The Loft, I Gotcha as well as private parties.

Brad stated, "The band gives me a chance to put my musical ideas into original music, and a chance to enjoy a little cash flow."

He continued, "Shotzi is an organization set up with the goal of composing music aimed at the recording industry."

Opus had also been together for one year and included Tim Callaway, vocal;

Leonard Ehalt, lead guitar, Eric Blackwell, bass and Kevin Sherrill, drums.

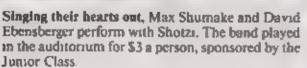

The band rehearsed at Eric's house and played in the Variety Show at the beginning of the year.

Kevin commented, "First of all, I do it for the enjoyment. Next, it is a good way of relaxing and putting my extra time into something constructive." Kevin continued, "We've been going pretty slow over the last year because Eric, Leonard and I couldn't find a singer. We've now found an excellent one and are starting to get moving. Hopefully in the near future, we will start playing at clubs around the Metroplex."

The Staff included only one Lamar student, Charles Back. The rest of the band members went to different area high schools. The band practiced in Charles's garage studio and played at private parties and church socials.

Each of the bands were similar in the aspect of the type of music that was played: rock.

Jamming out, Brad Harper rocks to the beat as the Adrummer in the group Shotzi. The band had five members and appeared around the Metroplex

Listening for the best, Kevin Sherrill performs with the group Opus. The band had four members and appeared in the Variety Show at the beginning of the year Revealing her favorite band, senior Kristin Hughes wears her Shotzi T-shirt. The band had the T-shirts made up for themselves and their girlfriends.

Clutching the microphone, Mandy Foster sings solo. She rehearsed with Charles Back on the drums and Steve Shunk on guitar for an upcoming audition

Admiring the sights, Mike Noonan, Jan Yarak, Linda Heekathorn, a Connecticut student, Cindy Paulsen and Donnie Frazier visit Yale University AFS members spent time in New York and Connecticut as part of a short-term exchange.

Many students take advantage of March vacation

Finally, the 3:25 p.m. bell rang and about their nine-day holiday.

Spring Break, for many students, meant Europe. Although many people did not go anywhere, they still looked forward to getting some rays and catching up on the soaps. Others worked extra hours on the because we met so many neat people and job, earning more spending money.

It was Friday, March 11 and the day spend their vacation was to head for the seemed as though it would last forever. slopes of Colorado, New Mexico and Utah, Crested Butte, Vail, Winter Park, everyone raced to the parking lot excited. Taos, and Purgatory only name a few of the ski resorts that students visited.

While the skiers froze in the snow, other a time to go skiing, to the beach, even students were frying on the beach. South Padre Island seemed to attract the majority of the people who emoved the beach life. "It was really sad leaving had so much fun! Padre Island is definitely A popular way for many students to the place to be over Spring Break !"

commented senior Laura Guinn

Students who took a foreign language also had their share of excitement during the holidays. Some French students visited France and England while German students visited Germany and Austria

AFS members spent time in Connecticut and New York where they visited a private school and New York City.

For many, Spring Break ended too soon but most students were already counting down the weeks until summer.

Stopping in front of a store, Bryan Wilson, Jon. Landis, Matt Murray, Joe Trietsch and Gary Valentine wander around on the German streets. Students also visited Salzburg, Austria where "The Sound of Music" was filmed.

Posing for a picture, Ms. Darlene Alford and students on the French trip admire the scenery at the Tower of London. They spent most of their vacation in France in addition to England.

Make ends meet

Activity during morning hours

It was Wednesday again and for some students, it was a great opportunity to sleep in a little later. Many students, however, managed to drag themselves to school to be on time for their meetings. These mornings were commonly known as Activity Period.

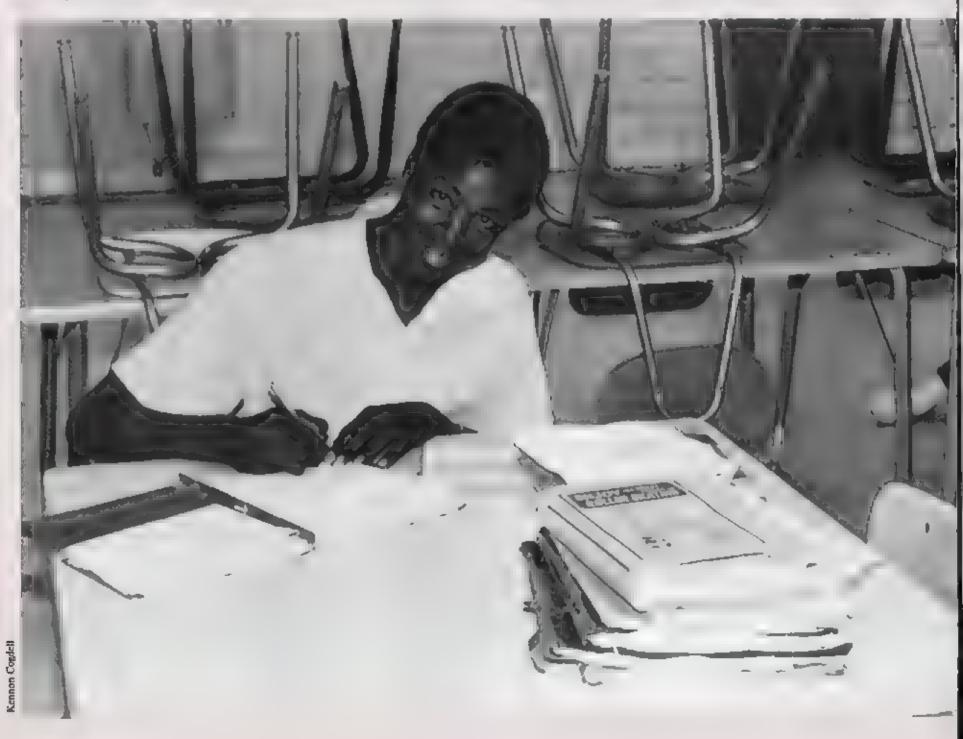

Activity Period was held every Wednesday and lasted from about 8 a.m. until 8:55 a.m. This resulted in the first three classes being shortened - which most students did not seem to mind.

Junior David Durham remarked, "I like it because you can come to school later and stay in your classes shorter." Junior Lance Larkin also commented, "I like sleeping in an extra half hour," Different clubs and councils met every other week which gave many the chance to attend more than one meeting.

Students often used this time to make up tests rather than during their lunch period. It was also a good chance to finish or, for many, start homework due that day.

Activity Period never seemed to last long enough and it was soon back to the books and class. Many looked forward to the next Wednesday so they could spend that extra time any way they wanted.

Munching down, Jane Kleinheksel eats a doughnut during Activity Period. Many students stopped at Winchell's to grab something to eat before going to school by 8:55 a.m.

Busity working, Student Council officers organize the events needed to be discussed during their meeting. Members and officers met every other Wednesday morning for these meetings.

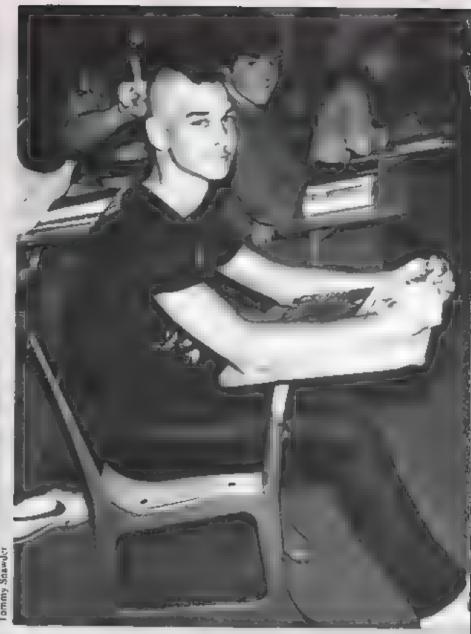

Listening carefully, semor girls attend a sorority meeting on a Wednesday morning. Meetings with college representatives and guest speakers were often held during this time.

Posing on stage, Suzie Carson and Brett Jarratt model prom wear during Activity Period. This assembly was optional for those who wanted to see the latest prom fashions. Starting a new fad, sophomore Jerry Worton sports an unusual style known as a mohawk. Only a few students were daring enough to try out the new look.

Doing their time, students wait patiently in D-hall for 30 minutes of their lunch period. This new policy was started to prevent students from skipping and being tardy more than twice in a six weeks period.

Burning up, sophomore Chris Godell struggles to make it through the hour. The temperature was recorded to be 92 degrees in a couple of classes.

'Hot under their collars'

Different temperatures cause problems for students

"-Cloudy and Cold with a chance of rain possibly mixed with snow or freezing rain.

Low near 29 with a 70% chance of precipitation to build up later in the afternoon."

Well, I guess I'll wear my yellow sundress so I won't burn up in second period. Gosh, I can't wear the winter shoes then. Where are my sandals? Let's see, I'll take my heaviest sweater and wool slacks. Oh yeah - and two pair of socks and change at noon so I won't freeze during sixth. Wait a minute! I'll freeze to death just getting to school. I've got it, I'll ayer Ridiculous? Maybe, but every student and teacher was familiar with the plight of this mythical student who faced the problem of dressing for the Mojave and Siberia on the same day.

The average student attended six classes and statistics showed that in only four and a half, or 75% of them, would the temperature be at a comfortable level. In the other one and a half, or 25%, the thermostat might have read anywhere from below 60 degrees to 90 degrees.

The chances were good, in any case, that everyone attended one or two classes in which they were less than comfortable, no matter what they were.

The culprit was the heating and cooling system which was not functioning properly for whatever reason. Many couldn't understand and were vocal in their complaints.

Senior Donna Benvenuto commented,

"I'm very fed up. I can't work in this kind of heat." Shelley Anderson added "The temporary buildings are just terrible! It's freezing in the winter and hot the rest of the time."

Another irate senior, Mike Hamilton said, "It's been a problem for three years. You'd think they would be able to take care of it by now."

But it was not taken care of, so the problem had to be dealt with individually. Perhaps no one wore a sundress and sandals on freezing days, but layering, wearing progressively heavier clothes over lighter ones, insured same measure of comfort. Afterall, what was piled on for one class just might have had to come off for the next. The trick was getting home with everything.

Opening their lockers, students put their coats away. Layering clothes was a solution to the uncomfortable classroom temperatures.

Sweating it out, sophomore Arthur Anderson gasps for a sudden breath of air. The varying temperatures of the classroom usually caused perspiration or chilis.

At a Saturday morning brunch, Joy Wilson, Astrid Brockhuizen, Karen McCtimue and Greg Vogel talk after eating breakfast. Some students gathered before the prom, however, most had post-prom parties.

Sitting patiently, Valerie Pasquale has her hair fixed at Daireds for prom. Some girls chose unique styles which cost between $20-$50.

Get ready, get set, let's party!

Preparing for the big event takes up students' time

"I began to get nervous about finding a date to the prom around January," Dione Rowell said. Nerves began to settle in rather early about finding a date and having the most exquisite gown or tuxedo. But as the months wound down, most were paired with that perfect date and May 14 seemed as it would never get there,

It all started with the prom assembly held in the auditorium on March 30 which featured the most popular and up-to-date styles in dresses and tuxedos. Advice was also given on the types of flowers to buy and to order them as soon as possible because of the fact that Mother's Day fell on the Sunday before prom and a better selection of flowers would be available.

Some girls thought it would be terribly embarrassing to show up and not have the deepest darkest tan possible. Most laid out in the sun for hours day after day to achieve this tan but others went to tanning salons to reach their desired color a little bit faster.

During the final week, tickets were sold for $5 or picked up free for selling 18 or more magazine subscriptions. Table reservations also had to be made.

Pre-Prom parties were held on Friday night and some were held Saturday afternoon but most were given after Prom in which they usually ran into the daylight hours of Sunday morning.

May 14 finally arrived and preparations such as picking up flowers and tuxes, getting hair and faces done were the last few steps in the long waiting process that began way back in January.

Studying the mirror, Laurie Ferguson has her make-up done for prom. Students took advantage of Saturday afternoon to prepare for the night, ahead.

Anatole adds class to the prom

Lamar's neighborhoods were crawling with limousines and the customary jeans and shirts had been traded in for tuxedos and formal dresses. It was May 14, the night everyone had been waiting for!

Loews Anatole in Dallas came alive as 7 p.m. approached. The selected dinner included chicken terriaki, rice, vegetables and baked Alaska. Yellow long-stemmed roses were placed at each table adding to the elegance.

Couples headed toward the dance floor after eating dinner. The disc-jockey played a variety of favorite tunes from slow to fast songs and from Def Leppard to the Senior Song, "Happy Trails."

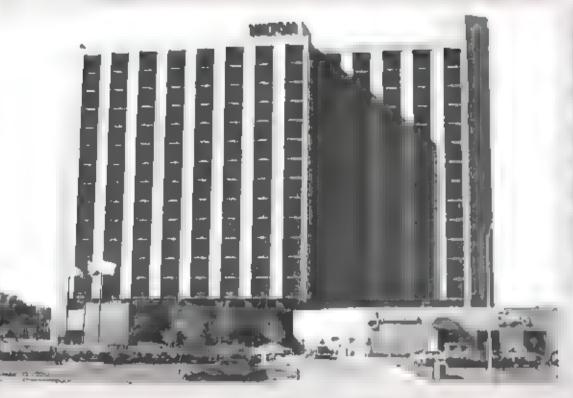

Most took time out from dancing to have formal pictures taken for $6. Flash photographers appeared everywhere taking on-the-spot pictures that could be purchased later for $1.75.

Couples started to make their departures about 10:30 p.m. admiring the Anatole from its glass elevators as they left

The crowds dispersed as they headed to parties in places like the new Hilton and the Holiday Inn.

As the sun came up the next morning many were still "partying" while others were just making their way home.

Arlington's new Hifton, located at the end of Lamar, was finished in late winter. Many students choose to rent rooms there for post-prom parties.

Dancing to a song, Kevin Brown and Tessa Anderson join the crowd on the dance floor. Most couples spent their time dancing, especially during slow songs.

Last week finds students carefree, yet thoughtful

When the first bell rang at 8:15 a.m., period Monday morning class. Many, still half asleep, hadn't yet realized it was the last week of school.

among students.

Senior Vance Ivy, as well as many other students, found it hard to make it to school and was glad that the last day had arrived. Seniors got out of school four days before the underclassmen were released. Just as the seniors were ready to graduate, the juniors were prepared to take over as upperclassmen.

Shannon Allen commented, "I am glad students lazily headed for their first we're finally going to be seniors and that summer is almost here."

Sophomore Debbie Barr stated, "I look forward to the last week of school for it will Feelings about the final week varied be the last time I will ever be branded as a 'sophomore."1

Though excitement lingered in the air, some students did have some regrets. Senior Donnie Frazier commented, "The last week of school is kind of sentimental. You look around at your friends and realize that you won't see a lot of them again." Carol Cloyd, along with others, said she would miss all of her friends.

Teachers had their opinions also.

Mr. Charles Ritchey said that it had been a hard year and he was ready for it to come to a close. Ms. Carolyn McLeod described the last week of school: "Frenzied, harrowing and . . . over." Ms. Susan Petry said she felt last-minute pressure.

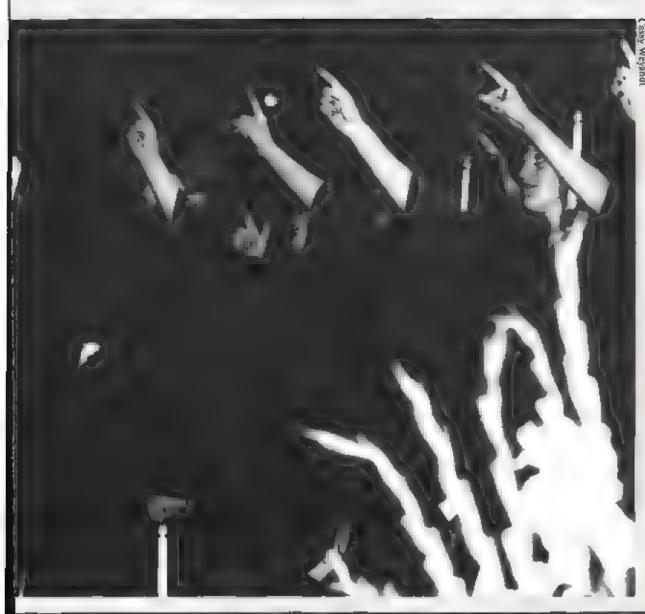

Senior Kolby Keeling wrapped up the general feeling of many when he stated, "Out of my three years at Lamar, I had one heck of a time my senior year. This year was more than I thought it would be. I only wish the year was longer so I could do the things I didn't get to do."

Helping themselves, schiors Jana Haddox, Rob Jones, Wade Schneider and Jason Watson add the final touches to their breakfast. The Semor Breakfast was traditionally held graduation morning before practice.

Organizing, Vice Principal Jimmy Jones collects locks from students. Second period was extended so the students could have a major locker cleanout during the final days.

Showing spirit, seniors sing the school song for the last time. While underclassmen studied for their last two tests, the seniors graduated on Thursday night, May 26.

Taking their finals, junior Kay Culbertson and senior Greg Elliott ait in one of their classes for the last time. Seniors were released four days earlier than the underclassmen.

Applying makeup, Dane McKaughan, Jill Fry, Alyson Long and Keri Healey prepare for the play, "You Can't Take It With You." Auditions were attended mostly by drama students, but were open to all those who were interested.

Reasting het degs ever a fire, Latin Club members relax at their annual picnic at Randol Mill Park. Many clubs chose to hold parties and picnics there as long as the weather allowed - to give students a chance to have a good time with their friends.

Paid for a grade

Go to work during school and earn credits?

Only go to school half a day?

Vocational Cooperative Programs provided students an opportunity to gain on-the-job training in an occupation of their choice. Students enrolled in vocational programs spent one hour per day studying job-related information in the classroom and at least 15 hours per school week as an employee in the business community. Students were able to leave school as early as 12:30 or 1:30 p.m. Each student received three credits upon completion of two consecutive semesters. If a student was fired, he failed the six weeks. If he quit, he had to find a new job. Clubs were also available for students enrolled in this program. According to the teachers, each club provided students an opportunity to develop leadership abilities by participating in local clubs and by attending area, state and national competitions. It addition, many enjoyed the civic and social activities.

Students: working wonders

Because vocational students only attended Lamar for a few hours each day, several clubs provided them with a chance to socialize and have fun. They organized several activities throughout the year.

OEA sponsored a needy family during Thanksgiving.

HOSA held the Lamar Blood Drive, attended a March of Dimes Conference and a Health Fair.

VICA raised money with the annual Citrus/Apple sale and two button machines.

DECA attended the State DECA Career Development conference.

VICA, HECE and DECA also held Employer-Employee Banquets.

Many of the students involved had positive comments about the programs.

Junior Chuck Johnson said, "This is a good program because you get to earn money while you are in school and get out early."

Junior Janet Cloud, an HOE student, commented, "The work program was fun, exciting and a good experience for college."

Senior Diane Hebborn said, "VOE prepared me to get out in the working world and be able to handle situations with confidence."

At the banquet, Raylinn Agan gives Ms. Joy Key a present from the HOE club. This was Ms. Key's first year at Lamar

Planting a tree, senior Keith Eustace participates in an ICT project. The group also sold grapefruits and oranges to raise money

Discussing spring activities, HERO officers Lori Feltner, Alisha Copeland, Tracy Henderson and Melissa Maddock congregate in the Homemaking Living Room Membership to this club was open to any student in the HECE work program.

Lookin' for help?

If your class needs a clock, who do you ask? If you need a tutor, where do you go? If you would like to help the community, how do you begin?

Well, right here. Clubs like Student Council, Keywanettes and National Honor Society were involved in helping others.

Student Council organized the Junior and Sophomore Class officer elections. As well as, the Charity Basketball game for needy children. In another project, Student Council coordinated a slide presentation of all the clubs for the PTA. Student Council also sponsored all Homecoming events, Theme Week in February and the annual blood drive with HOE.

As vice president Vance Ivy said, "It's been a great year. Everything the council has tried, has had a good response from the student body. This year has had one of the best student bodies ever."

The Keywanettes participated in several major service projects. They worked with the elderly at the Masonic Home, helped with and collected canned goods for UNICEF and gathered newspapers for the Humane Society. During February, the club sold carnations to raise money for the Leukemia Foundation. In addition, they volunteered to help the children at Wimbish Elementary during their lunch hour once a week.

The National Honor Society rescued many students from falling grades. Club members volunteered their time to tutor others before school, during lunch and after school hours, while keeping their own averages at a 10.0. They also held a Christmas party for the students of Veda Knox and took them on a field trip to Sesame Place.

It's your serve now

If you felt a need to help others or just wanted to have a good time with friends, several clubs were available.

With its 35 members, Interact did a number of good deeds for the community. In the earlier part of the year, the club sponsored a Girl Scout troop and took them to the zoo. They also bought a turkey and collected canned goods for a Thanksgiving basket which they presented to needy children. During the Christmas season, they delivered flowers to senior citizens.

In addition to a having fun while helping others, they had some of their own fun like a rotary dinner at different members' houses. Amy Lansing explained, "It's a good way to get involved in the community and help those who aren't as fortunate."

The Fellowship of Christian Athletes had two groups take ski trips during Christmas and Spring Break. One with 74 went to Taos, N.M. and the other with 33 went to Purgatory, Colo. The club sold wrapping paper to help pay for some of the expenses.

FCA also had several guest speakers attend their meetings. These included Ken Suarez, a former Texas Ranger, Ken Webb, LHS math teacher and former football player at University of Tennessee; and Trey Hillman, UTA baseball player.

Speaking to the new sophomores, Pam Thompson introduces the officers of Student Council and their jobs. Student Council officers were elected in the spring.

Dancing around in a circle, the NHS and Veda Knox students celebrate Christmas. NHS members plan two yearly events for Veda Knox students.

Finishing up, Stephame Hibbard displays her bird feeder. Keywanettes sponsored this project to benefit senior citizens

Let's go clubbin'

As the year was drawing to an end, the foreign language clubs planned many different things to do and places to go. Clubs gave members a chance to participate in a variety of activities.

As Cheryl Walls put it, "I feel like I'm more a part of Lamar being involved in different clubs."

As the seniors began to pack away their books, the clubs started to plan going-away activities for the seniors. Boxes filled with goodies were made for the seniors and presented at Senior

Send-offs by the different clubs.

From parties and picnics to meetings during Activity Period, the foreign languages found something to do.

"There were a lot of activities to do in the German Club such as Novemberfest, and competitions in Austin," said D'Ana Morris.

The overall party was held at Randol Mill Park which gave members a chance to mingle with the other clubs. Clubs participated in various activities ranging from soccer games to dances.

Relaxing between events, seniors Gwen Snyder and Mary Beth Keglovits wait for their turn in competition. German Club received first place for scavenger hunt and won several individual ribbons at the Austin competition Preparing to sing, the Spanish Club participates in the Christmas assembly. All of the clubs learned to sing carols in their different languages.

Eating their pasta, members of the German Club visit an Italian restaurant in Austin. Some of the German students who placed at Novemberfest, went to Austin for the State German Competition.

As I punch the snooze button for the last time, I slowly climb out of bed and make it to the shower. Trying to hurry to make it to Activity Period to attend my foreign language club meeting, I gulp down my breakfast and speed to school to make it on time.

Many students found themselves in this situation on Wednesday mornings. Foreign language club members utilized every other Activity Period for their meetings to discuss future plans, parties and fund raisers. With all of the different activities, many members found i difficult to participate in every even scheduled.

Getting up early was hard for some, but they slowly got used to it as the year passed. The foreign language clubs me and talked about future plans such as preparing the senior send-offs.

Other activities included working fo Novemberfest, hosting a progressive dinner, playing soccer and selling everything from advent calendars to stuffed animals and gummy bears.

Toasting their cups, Lisa Gittaban, Cheryl Walls, Sherri Shepherd and Connie Gallagher enjoy their Spanish tasting day in the cafeteria. Each class got a chance to have a tasting day, and each student brought a dish from the country they studied.

Rehearsing for their apcoming performance, seniors Kellie Stockton and Gwen Snyder practice their pronunciation. The German III class practiced for six weeks before taking their play to state competition in Austin. Taking time out to eat, Ms. Wilma Smithson and senior Dina White enjoy each other's company while tasting food from the Foreign Language party, Many students from all clubs showed interest in tasting food from other countries.

Come on, let's party

With the beginning of a new year came the excitement of the foreign language get-togethers. Many people were involved in certain clubs and showed a lot of interest when it came to having parties.

Randol Mill park was a popular atmosphere for language parties and it provided students a chance to let loose and enjoy themselves. Sports were played and weenies were roasted.

Springtime brought about a perfect time for more picnics, and gave students an opportunity to be with their friends.

The foreign language party that was held near Valentine's Day, gave students a chance to meet members of other clubs. Students brought certain hot dishes that pertained to their club's countries.

As Amy Cooper, secretary of the Spanish Club put it, "It was a big success and everyone enjoyed themselves."

Picnics and parties were some of the major reasons that people became members of the foreign language clubs, and often produced fun through each club.

Waiting patiently for his pizza, Stephen Stoycos talks with friends at Pizza Inn, Latin Club, as well as other foreign language clubs often got together for parties and picnics.

Conversing with friends, sophomore Andee Russell & eats pizza with the Latin Club. Students from the Latin Club retreated to Pizza lun for a social get-together. Homes, parks and restaurants were amain places to go for parties.

Roasting hot dogs, Stacy Watt, Make Hail and Stacey Gartrell try to cook. Many pictures were held at Randol Mill Park, and gave students a chance to visit outside of class.

Dancing the night away, Ms. Ruth Buechlein, German Club sponsor, shows her steps at the Foreign Language party. German Club also participated in the Novemberfest at Plano Senior High and various awards were received.

At the Foreign Language party, students dance in the Valentine atmosphere. Many students arrived at the party with a dish from their countries, and many enjoyed conversing with other club members.

'And we are but players'

Many students thought of the auditorium as a big place with lots of chairs. Drama and music students. however, looked at the auditorium and saw the stage, the place where they performed.

The stage was used often during the year to entertain the student body with various performances.

From the Speech and Drama Department came the play, "You can't take it with You," the UIL one-act, "Carnival of Thieves," and "Off the Wall," a comedy show.

In the fall, the choir also had a talent show "V'riety Tonight." They sang "The Messiah" at their Christmas concert and performed a concert in the spring. The mainly on developing musical talen orchestra gave a fall, Christmas and spring concert.

The band not only entertained up on stage with its fall and spring concerts but also out on the football field and at all pep rallies.

Putting the students up on stage wasn't the only reason for the performing arts organizations.

"Our goal is to promote interest in all normally see." aspects of theater," said Ms. Sharie Bailey, Tragos and Thespian sponsor.

"But," she continued, "more influence is given to the performing side than the performance. technical side."

Band, choir and orchestra focused while the speech team strengthened logi and argumentative skills as well a speaking and performing abilities.

But what made someone want to get up on stage and perform?

Thespian Keri Healey answered, "I lik making people laugh, I love doin fanatical characters because there is a little bit of them in me that people don'

Practice perfects

"It's really hard to rehearse because everybody has other obligations so it's hard to get the whole crew together," said Jill A. Johnson about after school one-act practices. One reason people missed rehearsal was because they were busy at some other practice.

The band started marching practice in August, and from then on through football season members drilled out in the parking lot on Tuesday and Thursday

Orchestra and choir members attended many after school practices which became more frequent just before a performance.

Anne Armstrong summed up the reason for all these rehearsals.

"They keep you from being nervous when you play for an audience because you've practiced until it's perfect.

At the official presentation, Mayor S.J. Stovall presents the drum majors the flag of Arlington. The band carried the flag with it on the trip to St. Louis, Mil.

Amassing awards Robert Stadler

"Competition is not for everybody," Ms. Alice Petersen commented, "But for NFL members, it gives them a chance to practice their strengths, logic, argumentation and speaking, with other students from other schools with the same strengths."

The speech team participated in eight tournaments plus UIL. The awards won at these various tournaments were many; too many to list.

The band also received valous honors at its competitions. Judges at UIL Marching Exhibition, the Cleburne Band Festival, and Six Flags over Mid-America showered the band with superior ratings along with special honors for outstanding soloists, color guard and drum line.

At UIL Drama competition, more individual acting awards were given to Lamar than to any other school, one of which was the best overall actor awarded to Brent Anderson.

The orchestra only entered one competition during the year, UIL Concert, where members received the highest rating possible, straight ones.

The choir also participated at UIL, but its highest honor received was the Bronze Medal won at the Festival of Nations in Washington D.C.

Competition might not be for everybody, but then again, the evidence proved that band, choir, orchestra, speech and drama students were not just anybody.

Clowning around between rounds, Dane McKaughan and Gary Valentine wait for the judges to post their ratings. The UIL district literary meet was held at Trinity High School.

One arch or two?

"Where else can you eat at McDonald's on a boat?" said Joe Trietsch when asked about the band's trip to St. Louis.

Although the band's official reason in taking the trip was to participate in the Six Flags over Mid-America Band Contest, band members spent some time seeing sights such as Merimac Caverns, The St. Louis Zoo and the famous arch, Gateway to the West.

The choir also left the state to participate in the Festival of Nations competition in Washington D.C.

While the choir was in the nation's capitol, Tom Vandergriff, U.S. representative, took time out from his busy schedule to have an audience with the students on the Capitol steps.

Both band and choir had to do a lot of fund raising to be able to go on their trips.

Senior Jim Johnson summed it up by saying, "It was worth all the hard work we had to do to get the money to go."

A fun(d) raising experience

Between 8:15 and 8:50 a.m. every other Wednesday, most clubs met to discuss and plan their activities. Some clubs however were notorious for never having meetings at this time. Orchestra, band and speech were prime examples.

For not having bi-weekly gatherings, these organizations did manage to get things done.

The band planned and executed quite a few parties which were held after every football game. Early in the year, members sold party mix to pay for new equipment.

Profit from the spaghetti supper helped pay for the St. Louis trip in April.

The Holiday Bazaar brought in money for the choir's activities. Some other fund raisers included selling honey, cheese and sausage, finishing up in the spring with a car-wash-a-thon.

The speech and drama clubs did however have a few meetings during Activity Period. Along with the ticket sales from their theatrical productions, Tragos members sold Santa-grams. This money helped pay for sets, costumes and make-up used in the productions.

Induction of new members was a highlight for Thespians and the National Forensic League, both honor organizations for outstanding students in drama and speech, respectively.

Thespians proudly boasted, "Ronald Reagan is a member."

So it just served to prove that with or without Wednesday morning meetings, organizations of students with common goals and likes could accomplish a lot.

Another day in the life.

Once in a while, I used to think that most people imagined that all journalism students went into room 115 every day and did nothing but twiddle our thumbs or roam the halls or laugh at all the pictures taken by the photographers.

I must admit, in all truth, that most of us did these things at one time or another. Sometimes the highlight of a busy day for me would be going into the typing room in the back and, knowing that I was caught up on all my journalistic work, I could sit in a chair and relax.

But I wasn't "caught up" on journalism very often; there were always little things that had to be done, like copy to be written, layouts to be drawn, pages to be indexed, pictures to be shot and printed, headlines to be thought up, ads to be sold and endless facts to be compiled.

Obviously, I am on Valhalla, not on The Scroll or in photography. But I have opened the door many a Thursday afternoon to be greeted by the thunderous demands of The Scroll staff, desperately trying to finish up for the following morning's edition.

I could hear plantive cries such as, "Where's the border?" or "Now tell me again, exactly what did you do with that copy?" (say them with your teeth tightly gritted and a look of insanity in your eyes and you'll come close.)

And don't forget the photographers, without whom the paper and especially the yearbook would be nothing but a collection of words. Sometimes it was this group who would suffer most from our procrastination. We would begin to pile orders on them usually a week before a big deadline and they would have to print nonstop to fill our blank pages.

The ad staff sold Valhalla and Scroll ad to pay for the publications. Every Valhall staffer also had to sell two ads for the yearbook. And, just between you and ment was hard. Somehow I have never had exactly what it takes to sell an ad. Ever year, I have ended up selling one, and their having to call what seemed like 50 place to get another.

But no matter what, there was alway plenty of help. Since the Valhalla staff wa larger this year with 17 staffers and photographers - there was less work to be done per person. Many people remarked about how well this year's staff got alon with each other. Often it was as though were a family; plenty of disagreement . . . but friends in the end.

Spreading the word, Michele Howard creates one of the many posters which adorned the halls during Valhalla sale week. All journalism students were eligible to sell yearbooks for $15 and a contest was held to see who could sell the most

Awards and more

Most members of The Scroll and the Valhalla were also in Quill and Scroll, a national journalism honor society. Membership was open to all who had worked on either publication for a year. Honor members were those who had collected 20 or more points by attending picnics, banquets, workshops and contests. Awards for copy, pictures, layouts, etc., were presented at the city-wide Quill and Scroll banquet, held at Homestead Barbeque on April 21. Best staffer awards were also presented to Tommy Snawder and Kathi Harper.

Both the Valhalla and The Scroll were given Awards of Distinguished Merit, the top rating from the Interscholastic Press League Conference. Also, for the fourth year in a row, a journalism student advanced all the way to state in UIL competition. Donnie Frazier journeyed to Austin April 29 and captured fifth place in Feature Writing on the state level, keeping the "Lamar Legacy" alive.

There were also various city-wide gatherings which gave all staffers a chance to get acquainted.

On March 3, journalism students traveled to Martin High School to explore their new Journalism/Photography Department and to watch the Cho Awards, a movie of the year's outstanding television commercials.

But possibly the best time of all came at the end-of-the-year dinner when staffers presented each other with "awards." It was then that the full force of having our "family" broken up by departing seniors or retiring staff members would finally hit us. It was sad, but next year, there would be a whole new family to take its place.

Blood, sweat and cheers?

For every organization there comes a time when practice pays off. Six varsity and four junior varsity cheerleaders were invited to perform for Texas High School Magazine. The varsity squad also entered a contest at Forum Mall and won the first place prize of $250. Also, the varsity earned awards of excellence at SMU cheerleader camp.

The Vi-Queens went to Orlando, Fla. for the Great Southern Contest of Champions. They received superior ratings in novelty, prop and high kick. A first place trophy was the reward for their novelty division, clown act.

Drill team put in extra practice from 7 to 9 a.m. and two hours after school up to the week of the contest.

"You have to work hard but your hard work really shows when you do well," said Vi-Oueen Amanda Adams.

Leading cheers, Vi-Queens and cheerleaders help boost morale at both pep rallies and mini-pep rallies. Cheerleaders were also responsible for cleaning up after all the pep rallies, for making the signs which decorated the gym walls and leading the crowds in the cheers.

Preforming a routine, V1-Queens Lesh Masters, Lyn Gerhardt, Linda Drake, Kelly McGuire and Melanie Nealon perform at a pep rally. Drill team members practiced their dances before each pep rally in addition to other times.

What were you doing the Tuesday after school was out? The cheerleaders were already back up getting ready for the coming year.

Practices began at 6 a.m. and lasted until 8 a.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays. The varsity and junior varsity squads attended a five-day cheerleader clinic in July at Southern Methodist University and had practice everyday the week before.

"I learned a lot of new skills and got to know the girls," said JV cheerleader Leslie Durham.

The Vi-Queens, on the other hand, began their practices the second week, Monday through Friday from 7 a.m. to 11 a.m. in June. They were off in July and started practice again two weeks before school began. During football season, the drill team practiced on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 4-6 p.m. and then from 7-8:45 a.m. everyday of the school year.

As Vi-Queen member Erin Persinger said, "Being on drill team is a lot of work but it's worth it and I enjoy it!"

There's always time to party

There were times for work and also for play.

The Future Business Leaders of America (FBLA) started the year off with a banquet followed by the installation of officers.

After a dinner at Pizza-Inn, members of the Computer Club gathered for a "Bring your own computer" party. They played monopoly and other games on their favorite toy. After every victory, Whiz-Quiz participants traditionally celebrated at Chili's. Around Christmas time, Future Homemakers of America (FHA) used their artistic talents in creating Christmas ornaments, which went to handicapped children at Nichols Junior High. Together with the club members, the children painted all the ornaments and kept them to hang on their trees. On April Fool's Day, the club went to Lad-n-Lass Day

Art club members were kept busy with a variety of parties. They had a get-together and a Halloween party dinners for Thanksgiving and St. Patrick' Day, and more parties for Christmas and Valentine's day. On Christmas, every body brought a handmade ornament Members worked on a mural in the gyn and in C.B. Berry Elementary. The year was rounded out with a senior send-off

Rounding off their evening, FBLA members and sponsors line up for the installment of officers. Included are Mr. Paul Anderson, sponsor; Cindy Trutt; Bonnie Smithson, secretary-treasurer; Deborah Shannon, Joy Wilson, president; and Ms. Joyce Smith, sponsor. Students who were enrolled in business classes were eligible for participation.

Fun fund raising

It was not the most important, but it was needed by everybody: money. Clubs had different ways to work for it.

The Art Club held a car wash at Taco Bueno. The first semester, FHA sold cookbooks. The money was used for service projects. It also helped to cover the club's delegates' expenses to the state convention, held in Dallas. In springtime there was a picnic for the members who sold

As Patrick Sutton explained, "Whiz Quiz needed money to buy questions. So we sold M&M's and Snickers."

FBLA raised $200 for a needy family at Christmas time. Paula Scott commented, "The family didn't have a father anymore. There were three kids, one of them, a 14-year-old girl was pregnant. They didn't have any money to pay their bills. Our money was very welcome."

Relaxing in his armchair, Elias Rivera attends one of the Art Club's parties. The club came up with a get-together every month which gave members the opportunity to share common interests.

Posing for a groupshot, Art Club students spend the evening together at a member's house. The party was held in the beginning of the year to allow club members to get to know each other

Fighting for victory

Various activities often brought clubs of different schools together.

During the year, workshops at the Dallas Convention Center attracted FHA members to listen to speakers from all over the country. The program included subjects ranging from exercising to how to keep your body strong.

In December, 75 people from Lamar went to Austin College in Sherman for a Math & Science tournament between more than 20 schools.

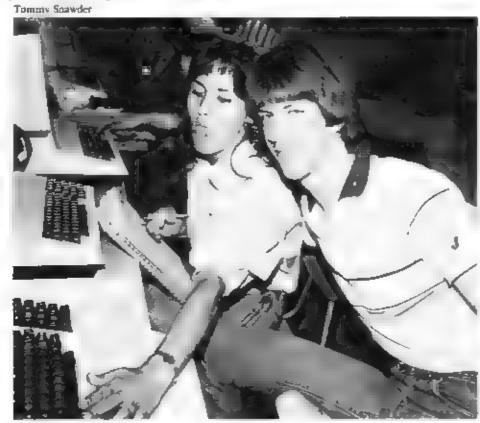

For UIL at Trinity High School, Lamar sent its top three students out of each event: science, number sense and calculators. Everybody who went to district placed first, second or third, making a clean sweep. All eight contestants advanced to regionals at Lubbock where Cloyce Stetson placed third in science, advancing to state.

FBLA participated in state and district conventions. At state, Vickie Smithson got third in Typing I. At district, Shelly Heizer placed fifth in Typing I and Bonnie Smithson took away third place in Stenography I.

In its first year, Lamar's Whiz-Quiz team beat Red Oak and Plano and therefore made it to octifinals before losing to Highland Park. Hiram Jackson was named to the All-Star Whiz Quiz team and was the High-Point Scorer among all Fort Worth area schools.

Chatting, Joy Wilson displays her various business awards to Juhe Harrington. Her honors included the Honorable Mention Plaque for the Golden Herald Award, trophy for first place in FBLA, Typing II award and a certificate for Who's Who in Business Education.

Showing off their outfits, Thomas Silas, Amanda Culver and Lesley Sanderford celebrate Halloween with the Art Club. Costumes were required to get into the party.

Raising spirit, seniors dressed as rabbits, clowns, bandits, army patrol and long underwear fiends cheer in a pep rally. Students tended to come clad in more varied outfits than most previous years as inhibitions about being different seemed to slowly fade.

Collecting fuctoria with a cutton swah, Dorothy Roberts, Kevin Edwards, Debbie Mauney and Alan McDonald prepare a Petri dish for their biology class. Many enjoyed these types of in-school excursions that would get them out of class as often as possible.

CLASSES

In a class by themselves

Well, here it was.

Another year of high school. For some

What would you remember most about your years at Lamar? Probably the little Existence.

Like having to be up at school at 8:30 i.m. on a Saturday to take the PSAT - hardest class because the teacher was tired but you did. anyway .

Or passing your driver's test with flying it would be their first; for some, their last. + colors when you had the meanest trooper At the most, college was only two years on the face of the earth sitting beside:

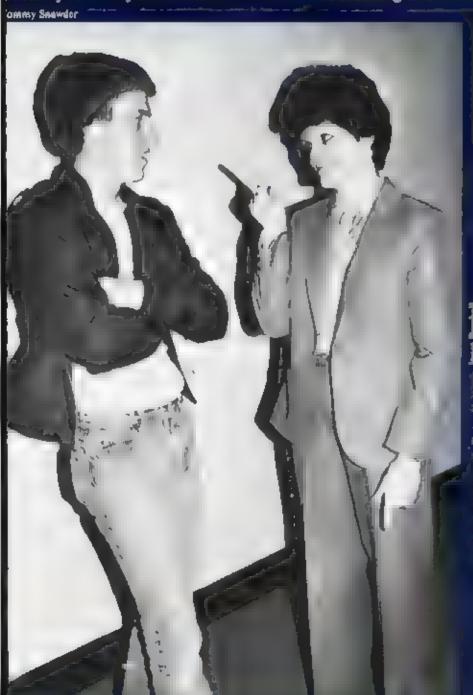

Or finding out that your college application had been accepted and that it. things that spiced up your day-to-day was the college you had been most worried: about rejecting you...

Or getting to have a free day in your which you really didn't want to take of teaching and the class was even more.

tired of learning.

Maybe what you would remember most would be walking across the stage as your name was called. There would be your diploma, your ticket to a betterfuture. Three years of hard work and a: LOT of fun.

Possibly, these would be a few of the things that you'd see when you looked back, because it's all of the great little moments that add up to what well could be some of the best days of your life.

Waiting in line, Laurie Morrison, Suzie Cross, Sherry Lappen and Julie Walker turn in money for picture orders. School became expensive at times, with pictures, yearbooks, and club sales of everything from trasheaus to bunnies.

Seniors: that says it all

Senior... the word alone was magic. It felt weird to some as they registered that week before school started. This was it, the senior year

Football season saw us being the heart and the spirit of the school . . . with the help of the "little people" of course. It really hadn't set in though, . . . not yet.

The senior film, that's right we got to miss class just to see a film, and they had to take those boring tests. This senior business was starting to be all right.

The class council, meanwhile, was beginning to discuss the prom. It kinda seemed remote to us in November, but selling magazines wasn't that hard.

There seemed to be scholarships everywhere, but only if you wanted to go to University of Guam. Ordering caps and gowns started sending the message a little closer to home. Eighteen-year-olds were registering for the draft. It was hard to think that what you have always looked forward to for so long was finally here. And next year. . . well, no more fun and games. College is serious compared to this high school business, or so we were told. I guess we might as well live it up while we we're here.

Vespers, Graduation, Prom: words that before meant "Those guys, not us" finall started to hit home. It was us that the were talking about, not those big guys that coaches were always with. The athletistars and the other people that everyon was talking about wasn't somebody elsanymore., . IT WAS US!

We served our times as "the babies when we were sophomores. We faded into obscurity when we were juniors. Now, the spotlight was on us. We were IT. Look like we made it . . . seniors of '83, Clowning around, James Duffie, Steve Clark, Steve Fisher, Jim Gildenblatt, and Mike Mateja participate in a pep rally. Senior year gave many students the chance to strengthen old friendships before going off to college.

Cooking up a storm, Lane Rawls, Sandra Wise and Danny Woodruff sample fondue in Home Management. As seniors completed their requirements for graduation, many opted to take electives such as Child Development or Home Furnishings.

Watching the action, Eric Dietert and Drew Corn take a breather during a game. Thirty members of the varsity football team were seniors.

Examining a graduated cylinder, Jessica Grimes learns about lab equipment in chemistry. Many upper level science and math courses were popular with upperclassmen preparing for college.

What a class act

Senior Power! New faces filled the coveted offices of the Senior Class Council this year with Kolby Keeling serving as president, Sharon Coleman as vice president, Vicki Lantvit as treasurer and Dana Shelhimer as secretary.

The Council decided on issues concerning the class including fund-raising and the details for the prom. The year was marked with a successful magazine sale as the annual senior fund raiser in which more than $15,000 was earned.

The late bird gets D-hall

"Ohno, only 10 seconds left to get to my class. Great! I've almost made it . . ."

R-R-Ring!"

What tardy again? That's the third time and you know what that means . . .

The dreaded D-HALL!

D-hall, or detention hall, was the administration's last attempt to control the tardy problem. Instead of the long lines at the tardy tables, as in years past, a new system was developed.

Students signed in on a sheet every time they were late for class. The third time this happened, the offender was sent to D-hall for three days.

D-hall was held for the first thirty minutes of both lunch periods. During this time, students studied, twiddled their thumbs or were "just plain bored."

As soon as this policy was established at the beginning of second semester, student and teacher comments regarding it were heard everywhere.

"It's a bummer!" said Jon Landis. "I really think it's a stupid rule."

"I don't think it's doing its job, because some teachers don't even bother to send their kids there at all," commented Kristine Spence.

"It's regressing back to junior high," said Ken Burnham, "They expect us to be adults but they treat us like kids."

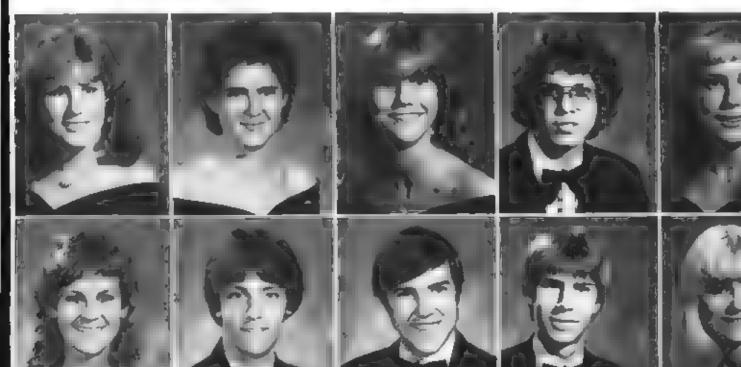

Most teachers, however, agreed with Frau Ruth Buechlein, "It has really helped cut down on tardies."

Sitting in D-hall, Kim Burton and Patience Anglin wait for their 30 minutes to go by Many students disliked the new rule because it gave equal punishment for everyone, whether they were 5 seconds tate or 10 minutes.

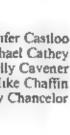

Signing in, Tom Titus registers his lardy. This sheet had been in use for the entire year but for the first semester, there was no penalty, such as D-hall for those who were late to class.

Classic favorites

The tension grows and the winners are announced.

Each year a boy and a girl are elected from their class as favorites. This year Kris Moritz and Kolby Keeling were chosen to represent the Senior Class.

Of the winners, senior Kenny Zaves said, "Kris is dedicated to the school, fun to be around and really cute!"

"She's friendly and nice to everyone," said Karen Finney.

"Kolby's been a pleasure to work with as class president," said Ms. Linda Beseda, one Senior Class sponsor. "He's a strong leader, outgoing and a

Paint 'em

What's in a nail? For most girls, it was more than just the top of their finger.

Kim Pannell agreed; "I want my nails to look nice, they are important to your appearance. One night a week I spend one hour on my nails. I am careful not to break them."

"People can tell a lot about you by the way your nails look," Suzanne Seifert said, "Like, if you've got a lot of goop under them, people will think you are a real slob."

How nails were supposed to look however, was different for everybody. The price of a manicure varied between $10-$15. Girls who wanted sculptured nails paid $50. But not everybody thought it necessary to spend that much money.

Azmeena Virani commented, "I don't paint my nails or anything. I just file them. hate nailpolish."

Boys didn't seem to think nails were that important. Chris Bucknersaid, "Hike girls who look natural-including their nails."

Well filed and polished, nails such as these took several months to achieve. Some girls thought that beautiful and distinctive nails were worth the extra effort and care they required.

Toiling over an assessment test, Dione Rowell concentrates on the facts and figures. Most colleges and universities required these test scores for registration.

Those detested tests

Tests, tests and more tests. It seemed we were always taking tests: SAT, ACT, TABS and Achievement Tests. Tests to get into college or tests every six weeks while in high school.

The SAT (Scholastic Aptitude Test) was the test taken by most seniors. Required by most colleges, it was given on Saturdays at 8 a.m. and the highest score possible was 1600.

"I remember it was hard, those little dots really drove me crazy," Alisha Copeland complained.

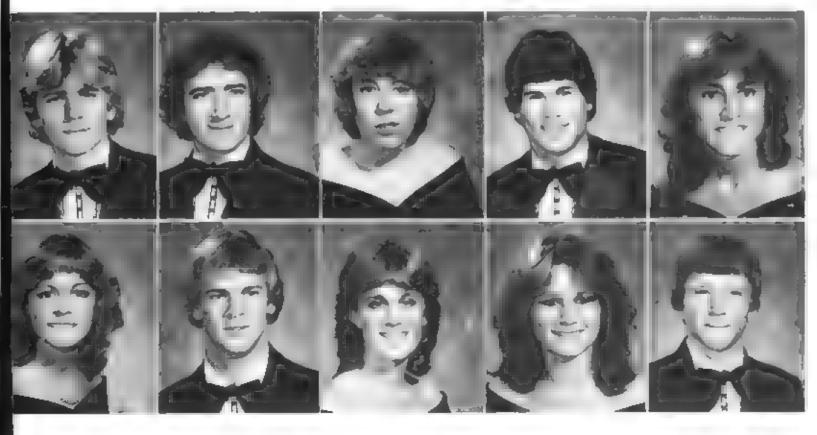

"And the worst part is getting up to take it," commented Lynn De Blonk. Trisha Crooks thought it was easy.

"I used the little book as a study guide, but most of it was common sense."

A lot of people took their tests more than once. Because, as Amy Quiqley agreed, "There is really no system you can go by to predict the answers. I took my test twice, the chances of doing better the second time are a lot higher."

Preparing for the SAT test, Brett Swigert picks up a study guide to take home. The guide, which contained sample tests and examples, was intended to improve test scores.

The next best thing

May 22, Texas Hall UTA, 6 p.m. The stage all set for band and choir. The hall crowded with well-dressed people. Blue and gold everywhere. Graduation? Almost.

It was vespertime. Seniors walked in and filled the center section as the band played "Trumpet Voluntary."

Treasurer Vicki Lantvit gave the "Invocation" and class president Kolby Keeling read the Scriptures. The Varangian and Venture Choirs performed "Battle Hymn of the Republic."

In his Vespers speech, Dr. Don Pike addressed the graduates and talked about their future in society

After the recessional, seniors gathered outside to talk with family and friends. The excitement was already in the air

Everybody got a taste of how the "big event" was going to feel.

Mike Noonan commented, "It was a nice ceremony, not too long and not too religious," Chuck Pointer added, "Vespers is an inspirational part of our senior year. That's why I didn't want to miss it. I think that every senior should take part in this ceremony."

Rehearsing their selections, choir and band members prepare for Vespers Vesper rehearsal was held Friday. May 20 at 2.30 p.m. and had to be attended by all students who wanted to participate in Vespers. The actual ceremony was Sunday at 6 p.m.

'But I don't feel like it'

I wasn't supposed to write this, but the senior who was supposed to, wouldn't,

She seems to have come down with something that's quickly spreading throughout the Class of '83. It's an acute form of spring fever that seems to have come early this year... senioritis.

Senioritis - a lack of energy to do work a lack of desire to do work, a lack of earing when you don't do work.

Senior Eric Blackwell said, "I didn't really think that it would happen to me, but now I just go home and don't do any homework."

It was easy to pick out the seniors from the juniors and sophomores. They were the ones who sat in class staring off into space or talking with friends about anything except school.

However, senior Misty Wilson said, "It seems like people make it out to be a bigger deal than it is. I know that I do my homework during the week. The weekends are another story."

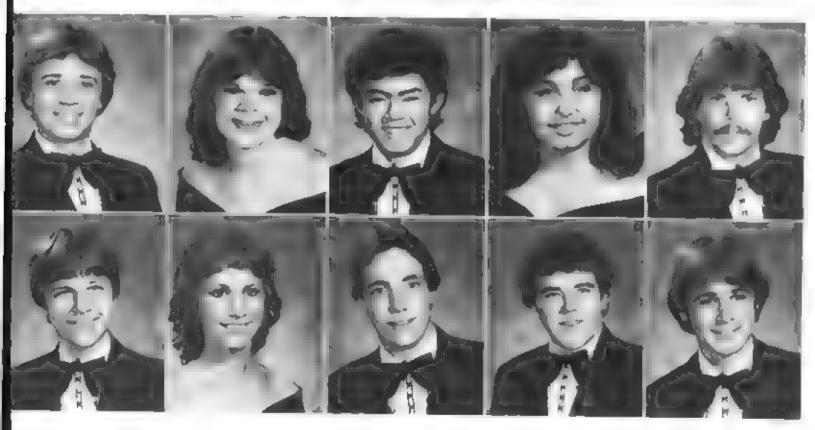

It's a good thing senioritis only affects seniors, or else this might not ever have gotten written.

Posing, cheerleaders for the Powder Puff football game show off their outfits. Theme Week was close to the time when seniors started displaying the symptoms of seniontis.

Goofing off, Paul Greer juggles an apple and two lemons in the hall. As Graduation grew closer seniors tended to abandon their schoolwork for more diverse and interesting activities.

Exercising her voting privilege, Dina Burton enters the voting booth. Students who were 18 were able to make choices between the candidates running for

Get out the vote

"Eighteen-year-olds, most of whom are currently studying government, should be among the best informed of all voting groups. However, they have the poorest voter turnout. It seems that 18-year-olds gained two privileges as a result of the war in Vietnam. One of those was abused, the other was neglected," Government teacher Ms. Carol Lawrence seemed to be right with this statement as very few seniors voted. Even people who weren't old enough didn't think much of it.

"I wouldn't vote even if I would be old enough, unless I knew a politician personally," commented Kim Turner, Debrah Nickerson said, "I think I would vote on major campaigns, such as voting for a president.

There were also people with different opinions. Beth Gregory remarked enthusiastically: "For once your opinion counts, so why not vote? I think it's kind of exciting. . . the stuff you read about all year long in government."

According to Brett Watkins, it sounded easier than it was. "I knew basically who I was going to vote for, but when I got into the booth, there were so many candidates I had never heard of, that I didn't know who to pick."

Preparing for November's election, a Bowie student and Vicke Lantvit stuff envelopes at Vandergriff tampaign headquarters. Seniors earned extra credit in their government classes by participating in election activities.

Growth and expansion have doubled the population of Arlington since 1970, the year the Class of '83 enrolled in first grade. This population growth has increased the number of students in Arlington Public Schools by about 1000 a year for the last 12 years. That meant a lot of new faces joined the Class of '83 from the first grade to graduation. There were however a few seniors who lived in Arlington and went to Arlington Public Schools for all 12 years.

Through the 12 years there have been many changes. One 12-year student, Susan Spore, noted, "The cost of school lunch went up from .50¢ to $1.10 and back then most school weren't air conditioned." Another change was that back then, kindergarten wasn't offered by the public schools so many students went to private schools for kindergarten like St. Maria Goretti's and St. Albans.

Not all of the students in the Arlington Independent School District lived in Jesses Grimes Arlington. Russell Smith recalled having to ride the bus from Grand Prairie in to Roquemore Elementary school every morning.

Donna Schumann said, "An advantage of not moving is that you make better friends."

And lastly, Jami Tucker added, "I couldn't handle moving. I've lived here all my life."

Showing off their elementary school pride, Kevin Sherrill and Eric Blackwell pose with a sweater and a sweatshirt from their elementary school days at Wimbish. Kevin and Eric became friends in the first grade and have continued to be friends all the way through jumor high and high school. This seemed to be true for many seniors.

Excelling examples

"They were involved in various activities and exhibited extreme excellence," said Steve Clark about the Outstanding Seniors. Pam Thompson and Jim Norcross were picked out of Jean Chung, Robin Hatfield, Hiram Jackson and Cloyce Stetson. They were nominated by teachers and elected by seniors. The winners signed the scroll that hangs in the office.

There were other comments. Vince Trebilcock said, "I voted for them because they did the most for the class." Tommy Titus said," I felt they set an academic example for the rest of the student body." Carmen Garcia added, "Pam Thompson is involved because she cares and has leadership abilities. Kenny Zaves said," They devoted all their time and spent a large part of the day at school participating in various activities to make Lamar proud."

Receiving their awards, Principal Weldon English gives Pam Thompson and Jim Norcross their Outstanding Student plaques. They were nominated by teachers and elected by the Senior Class.

A penny saved?

Many lower classmen observed seniors as being free and easy. Wrong again, sophomores. The life of a senior might have been easy but it definitely wasn't free.

Senior Amy Taylor commented on why being an upperclassman cost so much,

"Seniors want to pay more to make their last year extra special."

Deciding whether to buy one, Tim Morris holds a model of the German Club T shirt. Club T-shirts were a popular but expensive item between $10 to $15.

For those who wanted something to remember their senior year by, there were the panoramic picture for $6 and the yearbook for $15. Senior portraits and graduation announcements were for those who were proud to be graduating and wanted to show it. Seniors needed to graduate in the proper attire, renting a cap and gown for $7.50. A tux or prom dress ran from about $50 up. Lastly, for college-bound seniors there were application fees and dorm deposits.

Luckily, the magazine sale provided a way for some seniors to earn their cap and gown and prom tickets in reward for selling certain amounts.

So whether they were trying to graduate with class or just trying to get out, many seniors found that their last year in high school was definitely not cheap.

Taking a measurement, the representative from Josten's determines Kelly Stephens' hat size. Seniors who sold eight or more magazines got their cap and gown free.

Cruisin'

"Only 10 more minutes and I get to go home!" This was what some students were saying as early as 1:30 p.m. Many had jobs that required certain hours. Others simply had already finished required courses and did not wish to take any

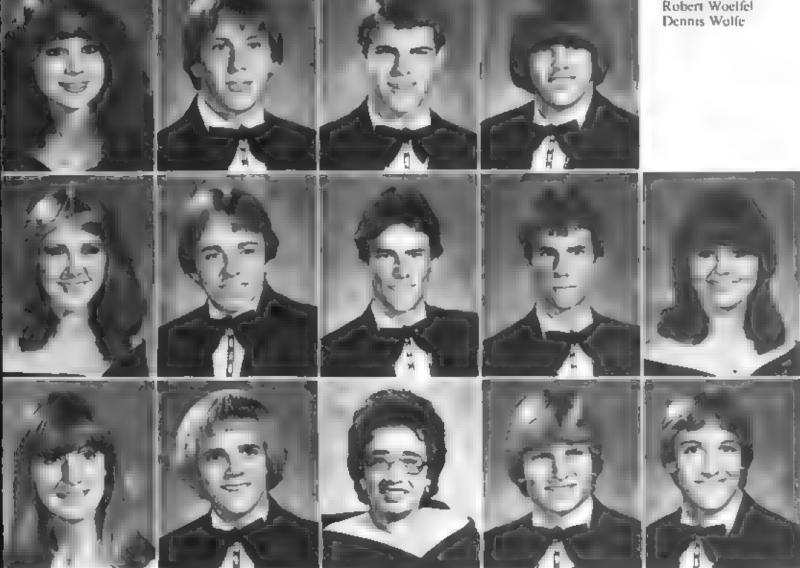

For instance, senior Kevin Hires said"1 got out at 2:30 p.m. because I didn't have to go to off-season football practice. I went home and watched TV or all the guys got up a game of basketball."

"I needed the extra hour between 2:30 and 3:30 p.m. to take care of things for the activities I was involved in. That was good, because I got school stuff out of the way during school hours and could go home without worrying about it," said senior Suzanne Seifert.

Seniors were required to have 20 credit hours to graduate. Most students met this requirement even with leaving school early.

By getting out early students found that they were not "late late" for a very important date.

Fating in the cafeteria, students take part in the Senior Breakfast the morning before Graduation. The activity was paid for by money left over in the class treasury after Prom.

Shaking hands, Jerry Rooker receives a scholarship at the Awards Assembly In addition to scholarships, class favorites, Who's Who, Mr and Miss LHS, Top 12 and Outstanding Seniors were announced.

Preparing for Graduation, Kathy Cochrum and Carol Nix pick up their announcements in the cafeteria. Students were able to choose from among several items - announcement covers, senior keys, and extra tassels - to remember their senior year

mmy Snowder

Prelude to the end

For most seniors, it seemed as though Graduation would never arrive. Preparations seemed to start as soon as the school year did. Senior portraits were taken during the last week of August and signaled to 610 students that the trials and tribulations of the senior year had begun.

Pictures were the main order of business for the first semester. Not only were there portraits to be ordered, but the panoramic picture to be taken and annual pictures to be chosen.

Throughout the year, seniors seemed to be always making out checks to Josten.

There were caps and gowns to be measured for and announcements to be ordered.

However, the year was not entirely all work and no play. April 25, Senior Skip Day provided everyone with a chance to sleep in or head to the lake for a party with friends.

At last, the big day was approaching. Last-minute preparations were hastily made. Caps and gowns were delivered and an assembly explained procedures for rehearsal and the actual Graduation ceremony. Finally, the time had arrived.

Relaxing in the sun, sentors take a break from school on Sentor Skip Day. The unexcused absence that students received was ignored by most as they took off for Eagle Mountain or Lake Grapevine for the annual festivities.

Having her head measured, Rence Werts gets fitted for her cap and gown. This activity was the first preparation for the upcoming Graduation ceremony As the curtain rises, the top five graduates stand at attention in front of the class. Each of these students had a role in the service Talking of the future, Valedictorian Jim Norcross speaks to the graduates and their parents. For the first time in the history of Lamar, two boys earned the top positions in the class.

Waiting to go on stage, Sharon Coleman and Kristi Prince display their gifts to present to Principal Weldon English. The seniors decided in advance to each give Mr English a crayon. The last person to cross the stage presented him a coloring book.

Look to the future

As the navy blue curtain rose on the stage at Texas Hall, a quiet tension filled the air. As the audience broke out in thunderous applause, the 537 graduating seniors looked around at each other: this certainly wasn't starting out like the solemn, dignified ceremony they had been expecting.

Following the invocation by honor graduate Jean Chuang, seniors listened for perhaps the last time to the choir's rendition of the Alma Mater. After another song, Robin Hatfield stepped up to the microphone to welcome everyone and finally get the "show on the road."

Cloyce Stetson presented a salutatory address stressing the importance of facing life's challenges, not in finding the easy or conservative approaches to life

Jim Norcross' valedictory speech also ran along the same vein. He incorporated the phrase, "Sometimes the only thing to do is the impossible." With this he told the seniors the story of Terry Fox, a runner crippled by cancer and emphasized facing obstacles and overcoming the odds on the way to success

After short speeches by Superintendent J.W. Counts and Principal Weldon English, it was finally time to move the tassels from the left to the right and actually graduate. Then came the monotonous, hour-and-a-half long task of announcing each senior as he received his diploma cover and circled the stage

However, from this point on, the ceremony was anything but solemn. As each graduate presented Mr. English with the agreed-upon token, a crayon, he was greeted by applause, cheers, shouts and even whistles and airhorns.

Following the benediction by Erica Dickinson, The processional made its way down the aisles. Before the last chords of "Pomp and Circumstance" had died in the auditorium, many ex-seniors were already downstairs picking up their diplomas. However, others were still outside hugging and saying good-bye to those that they may never see again.

The Class of 1983 was embarking on the rest of their lives.

Paying close attention, Karen McKenzie listens to the speaker. Karen and several others planned to get marmed after seaving school while the rest planned for college or careers.

Using crutches as guns, Brad McCool and Alvy Devia amuse Todd Ellington and Everett Bacon in their Latin III class. The class, containing mostly juniors, was offered for the first time in many years since so many were interested in it.

Admiring it, Gigs Goesling and Susan Heath look at a class ring. Rings were ordered during the sophomore year and came in at the beginning of the junior year.

Unlocking her car, Astrid Brockhuizen prepares to go out for lunch. One of the best things about being a junior was getting to have a license and sometimes even your own car, which provided additional new freedoms.

Eleven down, one to go

One step below being a senior, but one giant step above being a sophomore. This was the position of a junior.

Many distinguishing traits were used to ecognize a junior. For instance, on the first day of school, they knew where the coms were. At the first pep raily, they walked assuredly into the gym and took heir place on the left side. Next year, they'd be on the right.

Juniors could take their newly-licensed cars out to lunch, without depending on anyone else for a ride.

In the fall, they received their class

Juniors began to take notice of their GPA and class rank, as they began to look for a college. Next year was the time for making final decisions.

In the spring, they could be found pouring over books in the library working on their junior themes.

At the end of the year, most had less than five credits left of the 21 required for graduation. Next year, they'd be wearing caps and gowns.

Only one more year . . .

Showing their spirit, jumors cheer at the last pep raily for the game against Arlington High. The jumor football players joined the class in the stands to boost morale

Smiling, Mike Howard sits in his history class. All juniors were required to take American History to be able to graduate.

Themes difficult

Research notes, note cards, biblingraphy cards, outlines and library books were some of the materials that teachers thought were necessities.

Being of sound mind and body, I find it impossible to control my emotions toward the dreaded "Junior Theme." Because of the daily assignments of the junior English teachers, students found themselves becoming frustrated with anything having to do with a library. Many students dreaded the thought of beginning their themes and having the incredible burden of completing it. However, they were allowed to pick their own topics which ranged from history to scientific discoveries to diseases

As Tori Sisk put it "I'm not looking forward to all the work. But, I enjoy writing about things I'm interested in".

Daily trips to the library tended to become monotonous and boring. Many students found themselves staying up late, finishing that last note card before the final due date.

I guess you could say that a large amount of depression had set in and spread across the Junior Class. Participating in yearly themes brought upon yearly traumas for some people, but others found it interesting. However in the end the grade seemed worth it.

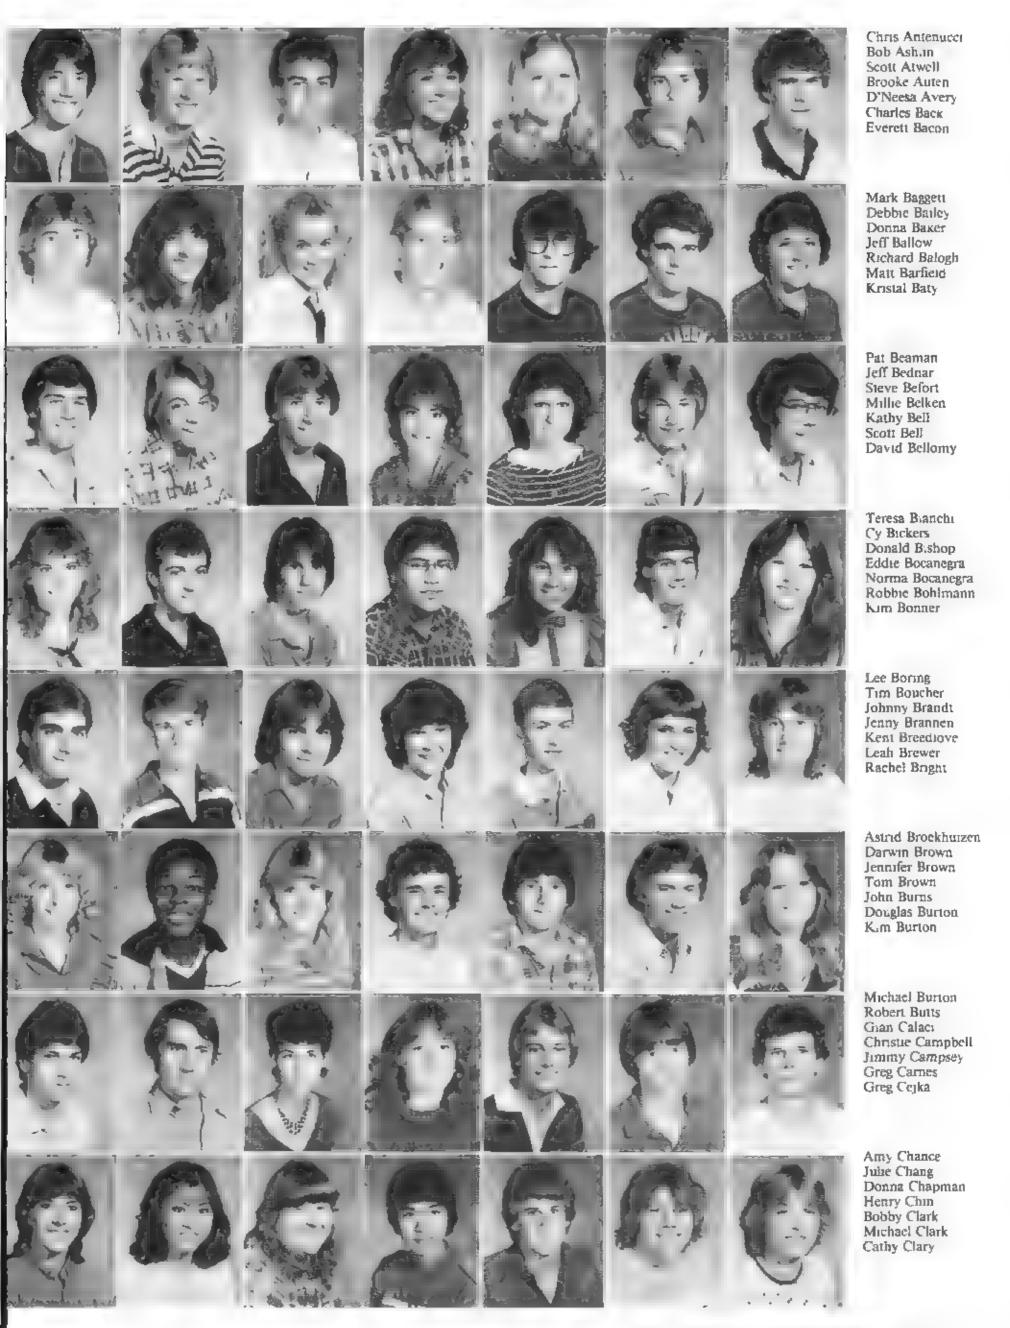

Searching through the card catalog, junior Cari Williams tries to find ideas for her Junior Theme. All juniors were required to do the three to four week assignment.

Promward

This year, for the first time since 1978, the Junior Class, under the sponsorship of the Junior Class Council, won the Homecoming Hall decorations. The theme was Viking Dreamland and it pictured the hopes, aspirations and memories of the class.

"We were so proud to win," said vice president Patti Jamison, "I think we have the best president ever this year. Stacey has really worked hard for us, and it shows."

The traditional Junior Jail was also planned for the Spring Fling, formerly known as Autumn Harvest. However, a lack of interest on the part of participating clubs caused Spring Fling to be cancelled.

Feb. 11, the Shotzi band, composed of David Ebensberger, Randy Sargent, Brad Harper, Max Shumake and Joey Guiterrez played in the auditorium for $3 per person to raise money for the class fund.

"We were excited to have Shotzi play for us," commented Stacey Gartrell. "We made a total of $700. Everyone seemed to really like the group and they were very enthusiastic about the music. We have a good fund set up now, and that should make our prom really neat."

"Because Matt and Cindy deserved it the most," said Brooke Auten about the two Junior Class Favorites, Matt Gurley and Cindy Patterson. Also on the ballot were Valerie Godfrey, Shaye Gottschalk, Jenny Porter and Ronda Waldrop, Matt Krzysiak, Timmy Dollar, Ricky Leroy and Tyson Faust.

Jennifer Brown commented, "I voted for Matt and Cindy because I liked them both." Stacey Gartrell replied, "Cindy is fun to be around and makes you laugh, Matt is always smiling."

Jenny Porter said, "Cindy is an all-around great girl and likes UT." Carol Cloyd said, "I voted for Cindy because she is a sweetie." Robert Janni said, "I voted for Matt. He is always friendly and never puts any one down." Bob Rowell said, "Matt doesn't act like he is popular, he is humble."

Jenny Brannen summed it up: "They are always in a good mood and nice to everyone."

Elected by their class, Cindy Patterson and Matt Gurley were choosen as favorites. This was a announced at the Awards Assembly May 11.

Mega-minis

They could be your best friends or your worst enemies. Those little metal boxes sitting in your dad's office seemed to be the coming trend

Several companies introduced computer systems after the discovery of micro-electronics that allowed these systems to be scaled down. In little more than a decade, America saw a boom that will probably be noted in history books as a turning point in American, if not world, society. Micro-computers were here and here to stay.

The personal computer boom also changed the way some students did their schoolwork. For instance, several used word processors to write English papers and computers to help with Computer Math homework, However, this did have its drawbacks.

"The worst grades I've given on some papers have been done by students who didn't really know how to run their word processor," commented English teacher Ms. Tena Ward. "Unless it's done right I don't like papers done with them."

Some students had nothing but praise for the new machines.

"You don't have to do homework at schooland you can learn more at your own pace by using your own computer," said Alan Richbourg.

For many of our parents, the famous story is being the first kid on the block with a TV. For our generation, it will be, "I was the first kid on the block with a computer!"

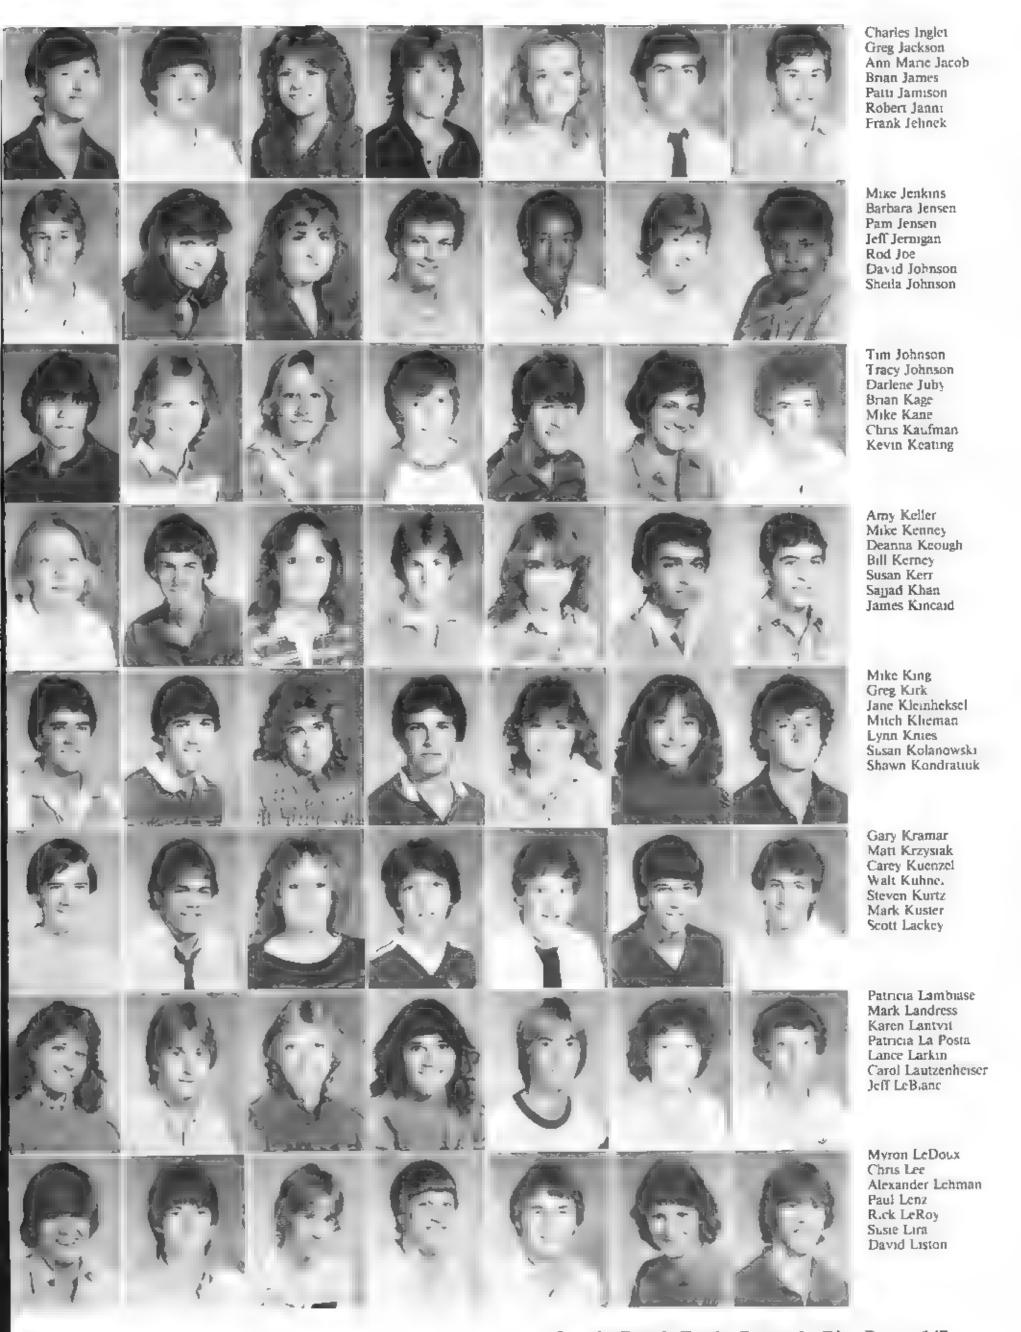

Contemplating, junior Scott Counts works on a program. Many students enjoyed writing their own games on their home computers.

Fast-food fever

"I'd like a hamburger, an order of fries and a medium Pepsi."

"Yes, I'll have a small pepperoni and a large Dr. Pepper."

Sound familiar? It probably did if you were one of the many students who went off-campus for lunch.

Hamburgers, pizza, sandwiches and tacos could be found in many of the fast-food places near the school. These included Wendy's, Arby's, McDonald's, Burger King, Jack in the Box, Mr. Gath's, Pizza Inn and Pizza Hut. There also appeared some relatively new places like Great American Hero, Gepetto's and Stuft Pocket.

One essential requirement for an eating place was that it be a rather short distance from the school since only 55 minutes were allowed for lunch. Students had to calculate the time it would take to travel so that they wouldn't be late to their next class.

"With the new tardy police, it was bad because I had to allow a little extra time to drive back and forth," said Todd Ellington.

However, not all students went off-campus at lunch to go to fast-food places and stand in line waiting to order.

Christy Hollingsworth said, "Most of the time I just go home or to a friend's house because hamburgers can get boring after a while."

Nevertheless, most agreed that going out for lunch was a step above eating in the cafeteria.

Sitting under the golden arches, Jana Petty, Michele Howard, Amy Cooper and Angela Russell take a break from school. McDonald's was the scene for a major food fight between students from Lamar and Arlington on the day of the football game.

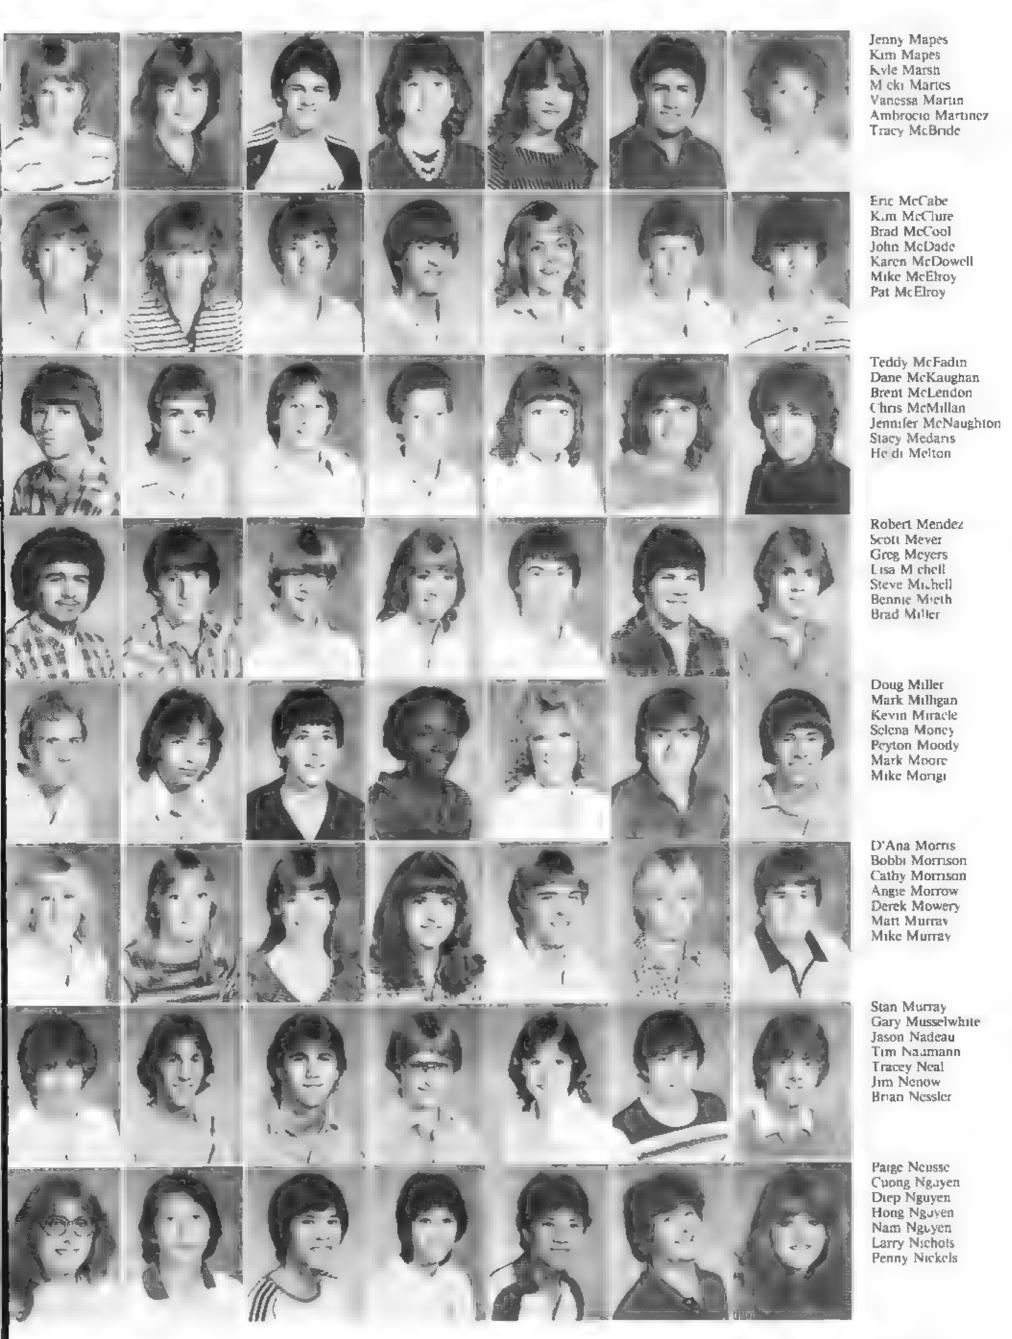

Getting ready to eat, Rick Howell takes advantage of the 55-minute lunch. Mexican food from places like Del Taco and Taco Bueno was a favorite for the noontime meal

Maybe could I be an Aggie?

Dec. 7 was the date set for the annual College Night for students in the Arlington Independent School District. Approximately 70 colleges and universities had either a speaker or a booklet of information available.

Junior Patti Jamison stated "It influences your decision on what colleges you would like to attend."

Jim Welch commented, "It's a good opportunity for sophomores, juniors and seniors to get a better idea of the advantages different colleges can offer." Junior Sarah Thompson said, "It gave me a lot of information about colleges that didn't know."

An unexpected attendance of approx imately 2000 overwhelmed the representatives, as many of them ran out of materials and programs by the second session of the evening.

Trying to get more information, participants of College Night listen to a speaker. Many handouts and booklets were also there for parents and students.

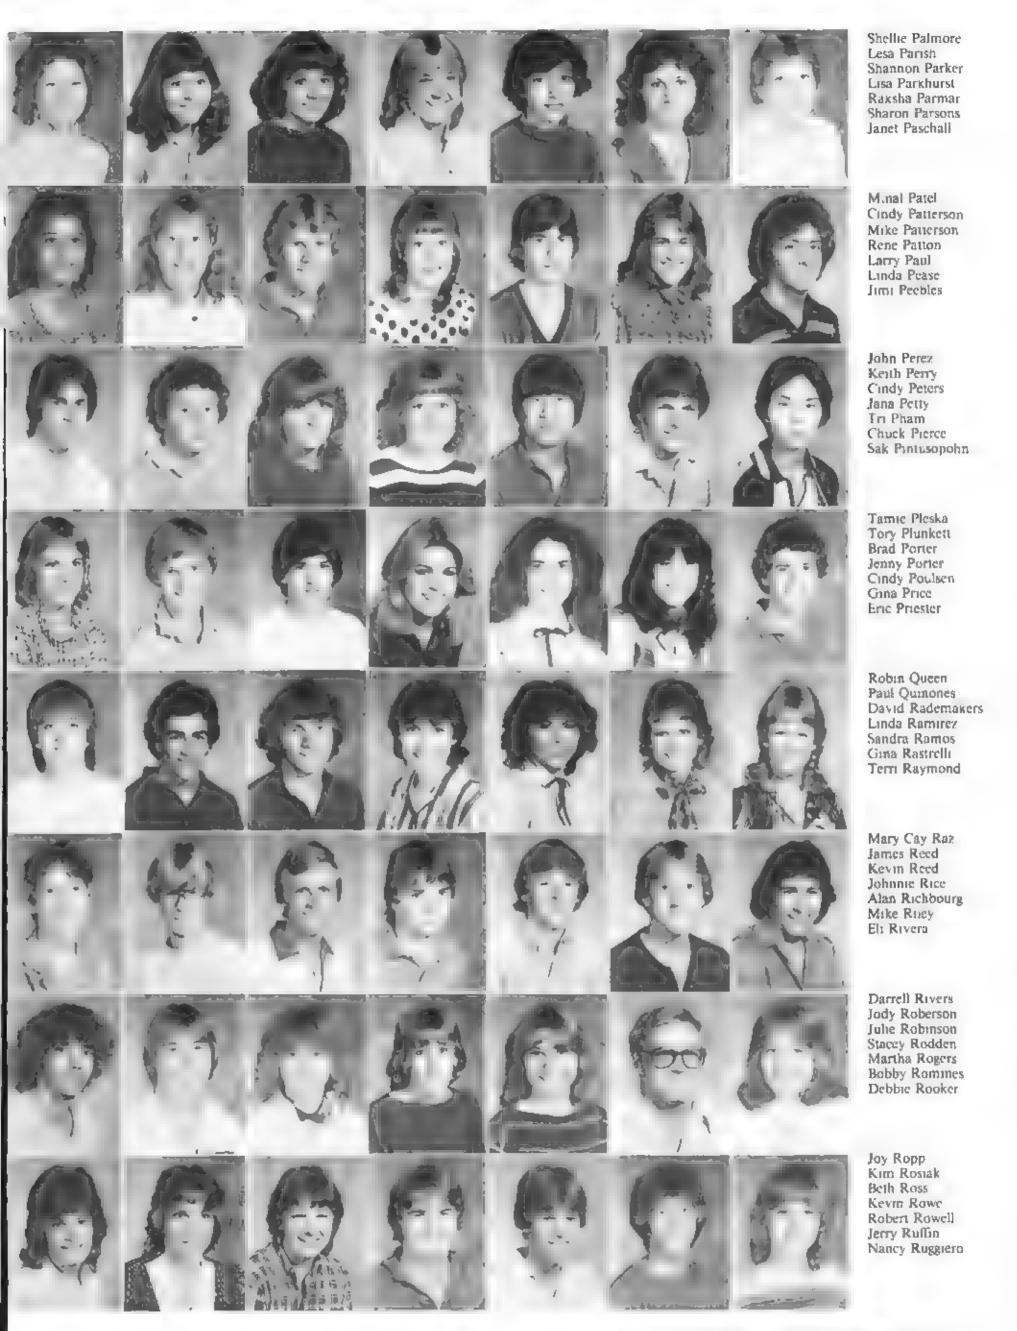

Giving up a Tuesday night, students participate in learning requirements and details about the colleges. About 75 to 80 colleges came to take part in the city-wide event

I'll pick you up around 7:30

Let your mind wander back over all the dates you've had in say, the past year

Remember the countless hours you spent in front of the mirror, primping and grooming and worrying about how you looked?

And remember when you went out with someone for the first time, how much you worned about what to say, what to do, and most of all, what might happen?

Just those common, universal things that happen on every date, to everyone - his shirt sleeve button totally enmeshed in either your sweater or your hair when he has his arm around you at a new movie like "48 Hours," or him trying desperately to find a delicate way to tell you that you have an ominous-looking piece of broccoli stuck between your two front

One senior girl, (names have been deleted for the protection of the innocent), giggles when she recalls going to a movie with a date

She and her date stood in line for tickets. after she returned from the restroom. He seemed to be growing more and more uneasy. so she asked him what was wrong. He hesitatingly stammered that the zipper on her skirt was undone and her slip was sort of uh . . . hanging out. She dashed madly for the ladies' room to zip herself back up. However the rest of the evening went smoothly and both had a good time

Another frequent problem was seeing old boyfriends or girlfriends when you were out with someone else. Since Arlington wasn't the biggest town around, this happened quite often

Some of the best places for dates were new restaurants like T.G.I.Friday's, The Keg. Rusty Scupper and The Cadillac Bar, which all opened during the year. Movies like "Tootsie"

Departing, Millie Beiken kisses Erick Milton goodbye. Although many couples experienced a variety of trials and tribulations on their dates. sometimes it seemed worth it and "E.T.", parties held in homes or clubhouses, or sports events like football, basketball, and soccer were also good places to take a date

There was also the romantic dinner for two at Reunion Tower. Your date reached across the table, took your hand, whispered a few sweet nothings in your ear and managed to spill your water glass all over the table, (and if you were really lucky, he would get it all over your new dress, too), or throw half the silverware that was on the table, on the floor,

Then comes the classic tale of the girl who was so enthralled with her date that she simply couldn't take her eyes off him

When he inquired as to the whereabouts of her home, she pointed out the car window an said, "There," without realizing that the weren't on her street yet. They said good-nigh exchanged a kiss, and she got out of his ca Suddenly, she was confronted by a strang house. She didn't want to tell him that it wasn her house, for fear he would think her a airhead. So, pretending she had lost her key she went to what she hoped was a back doc and hid in the bushes until he was gone. St then hiked several blocks to her home.

Complicated, isn't it?

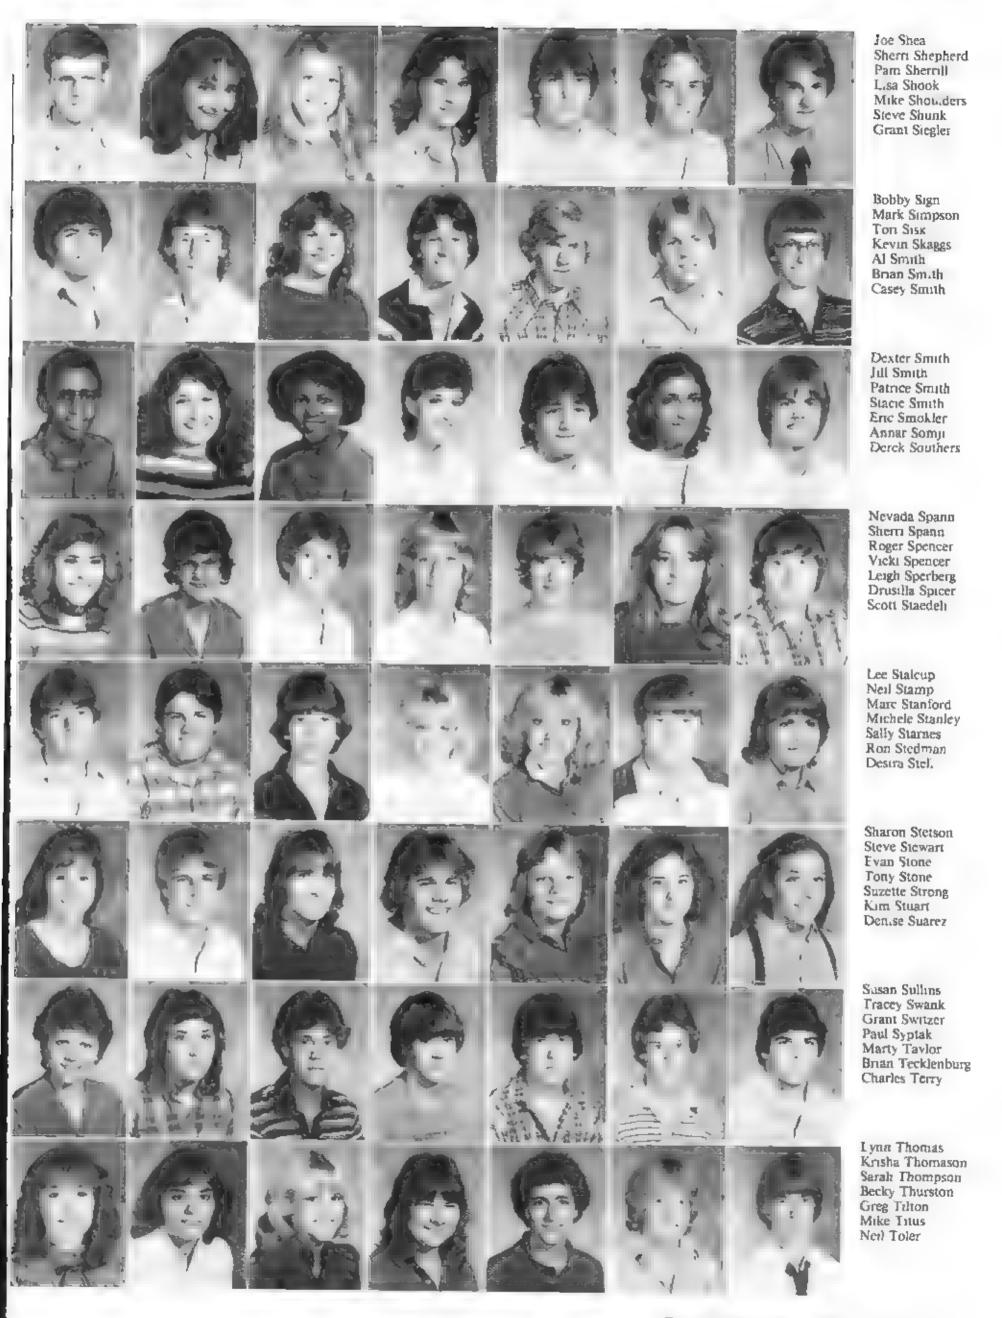

Sometimes it seemed like it wasn't worth i but all it took was one special moment share together to make you both realize that definitely was Doing schoolwork with style

Garfield, Smurfs, Snoopy. In the school, in the halls, in the classroom. Was this an invasion? In some ways - yes.

As students set out to buy school supplies, many decided to go for the more personal touch.

Folders, pencils, notebooks and erasers were all available in many colors and designs including those with cartoon and comic strip characters, sports teams, nature scenes and animals.

The problem with all supplies was the price. Folders, which parents would say cost them a nickel, had risen to 35 cents and, if you wanted ones with brads as well as pockets, up to 50 cents.

One of the best selling products had to be the erasable pen. They made writing English papers a lot easier. While there were several kinds on the market, as yet none have been decorated

For the preppie, there appeared alligator and polo notepads and pencils.

Speaking of pencils, they could be found in great variety. Ice cream cones, lips, rainbows, hearts, teddy bears, horses and multi-colored leads were all examples of variations of the good of #2.

What will be next? E.T. lunch boxes in the cafeteria?

Preparing to take notes, Carol Cloyd gets out a pencil and paper. Peanuts book covers and Smurf folders were two examples of school supplies available to students.

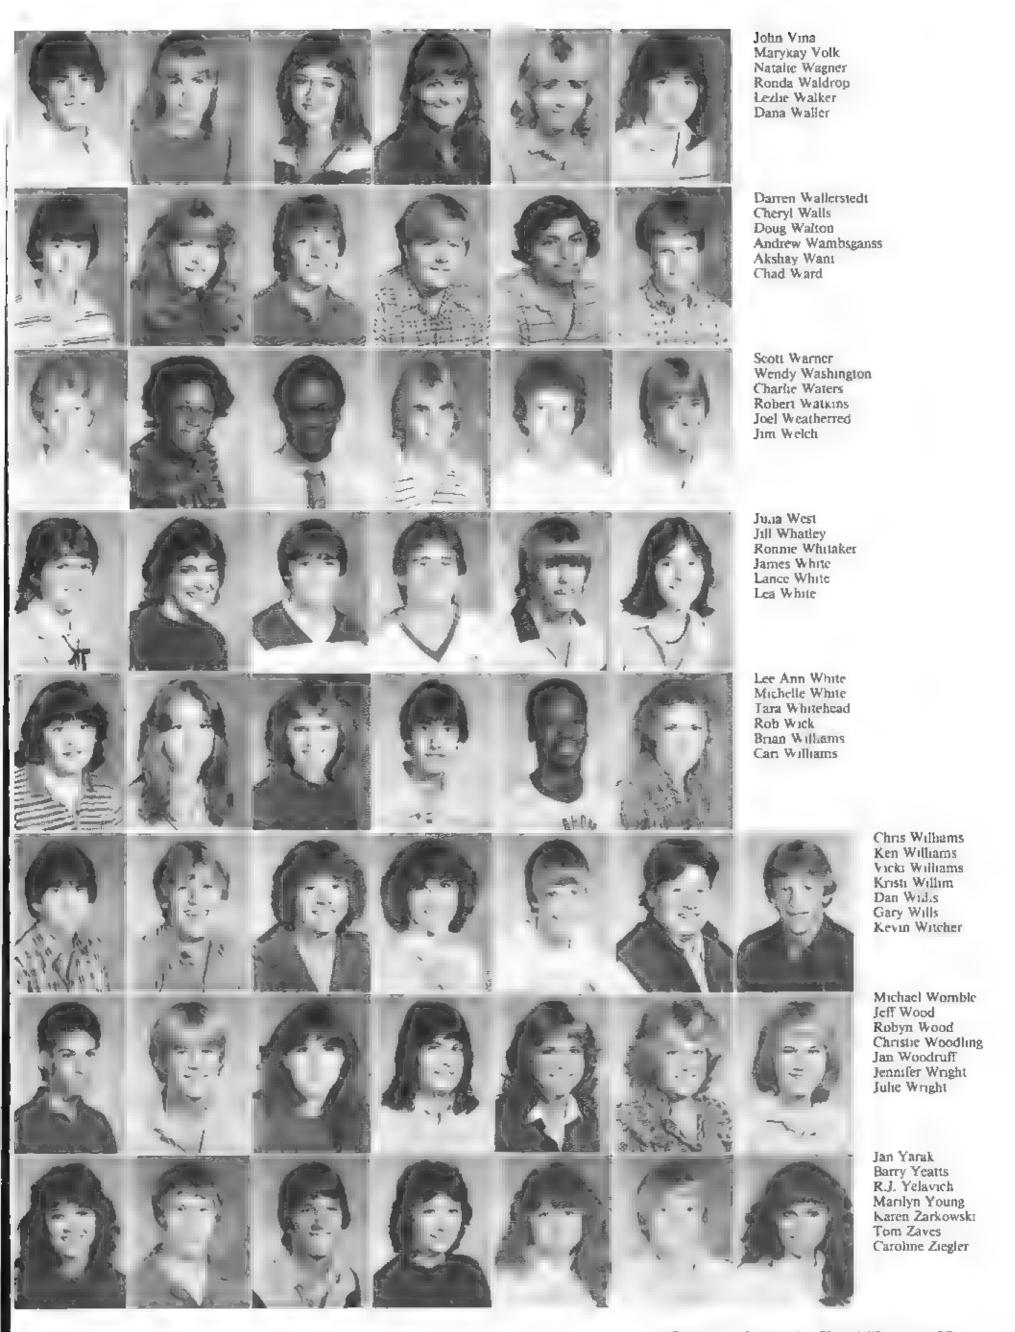

Getting ready to go to class, Suzy Deffeyes stops off at her locker. This was the second year that Garfield products were on the market

Testing elements, juniors Mike Hail and John McDade place them into the stame of a bunsen burner to identify them by the color of the resulting stame. Many students opted to take Chemistry Libert junior year and then go on to take Physics or Chemistry II their senior year.

Hey man, what's the plan?

"I'm even more confused!" was a common cry heard as students filed out of the library after three days of junior orientation in February.

During these days, students listened to different teachers discuss the many possible electives for their senior year.

First, it was necessary for the juniors to decide whether or not to stay for the entire day. As seniors, it would be possible to leave school as early as 1:30 p.m.

The list of possible senior classes was long. The only required classes were government and English and even the decision of which English was left up to the student. Other choices for senior classes included: foreign languages, math. science, business, music, athletics, homemaking, work programs - even journalism.

Students' opinions of the orientation varied. Debbie Devine stated, "It gave us a chance to see what courses were offered to us, but now I'm even more confused because there are so many choices.

Cari Williams commented, "It was OK.

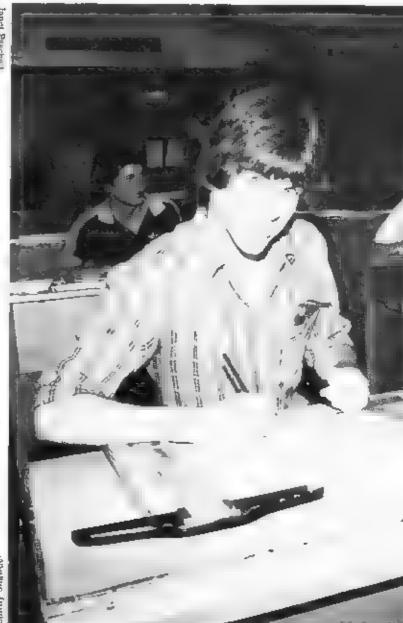

I thought the pig (which Biology II presented) was the most interesting."

However, John McDade mentioned, "It was a good chance to do my homework."

Although students' opinion of orientation varied, most agreed that the decision of their senior classes would be a hard one.

Practicing their songs, Betsy Farmer, Leigh Sperberg, Shellie Palmore, Kelly Rice and Mandy Foster prepare for an upcoming concert. Students were required to pass an audition before being accepted into the Madrigals.

Working on a project, David Liston completes a drafting assignment. Many students who took drafting were planning a career in the engineering field.

Learning their body parts, juniors Pam Sherrill and Bryan Hill demonstrate for their German class. German was one of the four languages offered

New kid in town

"Where in the heck am 1? I never knew there were so many halls around here. I'll feel foolish if I have to ask anyone where I am. I know.... I'll just walk around and look like I know what I'm doing. Let's see, if it has a 1 to begin with, it's downstairs, and if it's got a 2, then"

"Who are you going to lunch with? Do you think he'll take me too? . . . I'll give him gas money."

"It figures, she's a sophomore."

"Sophomores, 50 cents, normal peopl

We were the bottom rung of three-level ladder. In the course of on summer, we had gone from the "Toldogs" (or the BMOC) to the scum of the earth. There was no other way to describit, just plain and simply we were the sophomores. Seniors of '85... that sur had a faraway sound to it.

At Lamar, Gwen Philips makes up one of 590 sophomores. Most students came from either Shackelford or Nichols Junior Highs.

Cheering at the pep rally, sophomores get ready for the Powder Puff football game. The game pitted juniors against seniors, so sophomores received a discount on the admission price

Looking up, Butch Waterbury takes time out of his work. Sophomores were required to stay at school for seven periods, until 3:30 p.m.

Roaming the halls, Tracey Lewis shows off her new tenns shoes. These shoes and other unique fashions were popular with the students.

To lock or not to lock?

Locker problems were at a high this year as many students tried to get through the mass of people - constantly pushing, shoving, waiting for a break in the crowd to finally arrive at their locker. Then pegan the hassle of trying to open it, only to find it was jammed or had the wrong lock.

"I feel that the lockers need to be spread out and fixed in better condition. New locks would not be a bad idea, since the old ones are so ragged," said Courtney Wilemon.

This brought the question of the real necessity of locks on lockers or even the need of lockers.

Sophomore Ande Sullivan said, "The locks should be attached to the lockers, so people wouldn't lose their locks."

Some students choose to decorate their lockers with posters, stickers and note pads. Sophomore Cheryl Clark said "My locker partner and I decided to hang pictures in the locker to brighten it up."

Lockers and locks may have sometimes been somewhat of a hassle but in the long run by storing students belongings they often proved to be an advantage.

Gathering up his books, Paul Skrue stops at his locker between classes. Many sophomores were found carrying lots of books to each period to get to class on time

Struggling to open her locker, Debbie Mauney resorts to violence. Many students chose to do without their locks because of the inconvenience

Sophomores get involved

"I wanted to get involved in high school activities and I felt that class council was a good opportunity to meet people and to nelp my class," stated Cyndie Thompson kirls' social chairman.

Involved seemed to be the key word to sophomore Class Council. Its job was to nvolve the freshman classes of Nichols and Shackelford Junior Highs so that hey would unite to form the Lamar High school Sophomore Class.

The council started off by electing officers in the fall. The election was so competitive that run-off elections were held for the offices of president, vice president and girls' social chairman.

Once the officers were elected, their first job was to organize the homecoming hall decorations. The sophomores chose "Hagar the Horrible" as the theme for their hall.

Then the real work began: fundraising.

Wanted: Trainees

"Custom Woodworking" and "Qual-i-tech" weren't well known companies to most sophomores. But to Shanna Clowers and Dottie Roberts, they meant business.

The Junior Achievement program introduced students into the world business by helping them set up their own small companies. This was done by dividing students from all five schools in Arlington into groups. The groups organized into companies like "Custom Woodworking" which was Shanna's group.

The next step was for the companies to start producing goods. Dottie and the rest of the Qual-i-tech team made Christmas bows.

Not only did the companies manufacture the products, but they also had to keep the books and sell the items. "Custom Woodworking" sold their product, coasters, door-to-door.

In applying all these skills, students began to thoroughly understand business. So even though the names "Custom Woodworking" and "Qual-1-tech" weren't familiar to most people, some day they just might be.

Winning favorites

Being a Class Favorite meant being someone who was outgoing, highly thought of and involved in their class, according to teachers.

Favorites were nominated through English classes and then were narrowed down to 11 and voted upon. At the Awards Assembly, they announced the one boy and one girl that was chosen to best represent the class. Tracey Collier and Mike Waters were picked.

"Tracey is very, very nice and pleasant. She greets people and knows everyone's name. Besides being cooperative and always dependable, she is interested in many things," said biology teacher Ms.

Martha Rape.

Tracey was also elected as one of the Homecoming princesses and involved in a number of clubs.

Mike was president of the Sophomore Class council and a member of both varsity football and soccer.

"I like Mike because he is very polite, courteous and well-mannered, which is an exceptional quality in a student, said geometry teacher Ms. Susan Petry.

Other nominees were Cindy Grimland, Misha Maroof, Mary McFarlin and Stacey Starr. Boys were Greg Gardner, Chris Godell, James Hanes, Andee

Russell and Jerry Woiton.

Brace yourself for an ordeal

... "But Mom, I really don't need braces", was a common household phrase with many people who had to get them

"I'll never smile again," said some people.

Braces were one of the most dreaded aspects of high school years. Some people thought that braces were needed, yet others kept wondering why they put up with them. Several people commented on what they thought of braces.

Laurie Welch said, "I liked getting out of school and going to the orthodonist, but it took a long time." She continued, "Sometimes they hurt, but now that it is over with - I'm glad."

"One of the things that I really hated was getting my picture taken," exclaimed Stacy Watt.

"Another thing that I hated was the stains that it left on my teeth after I got them off," she said.

Braces were really a pain in the mouth for some people, but a pain in the pocketbook for parents. Braces ranged from $1500 to $2000, including the retainer that was used after the braces were removed.

Even though some people went through self-concious doubts about their appearances, they really had something to smile about after it was all over.

Revealing her straightened teeth, sophomore Misha Macoof shows an example of the results of having braces. After getting braces off, appointments were still made to check up on the finished product

Showing his hardware, sophomore Make Waters, shows an example of the lifestyle of people with braces. Most people wore braces from one to five years, depending on how crooked their teeth were

PDA: A touchy situation

Ha! That's it. First period is finally over. It's the same routine: grab the books, run down the hall and be outside Susan's class right as she is coming out. Stroll sweetly hand in hand down the hall telling each other about all the things that happened since the last time that we were together (Let me see, it's been about 55 minutes.)

After reviewing the wonders of English and Algebra II, Susan and I will huddle around her locker, and in the course of getting our books, we'll sneak a small kiss or two. That's right, we've just committed PDA! (public display of affection)

The "Handbook for Students and Parents described this activity as "disruptive behavior for the educational environment and in poor taste." This included "kissing and arms around each other."

Even with the tough talk of the handbook's rule, many students broke this rule at least once. Think back to that secret rendezvous where you and your, uh friend, syncronized your watches to meet right around the corner from the biology class. Better yet, all of you band members remember those secluded little practice rooms?

Then there were the good of teacher responses when you were caught in the act. Such gems as "A-A-Ahem," (The throat clearing routine), the "You don't need to be doing that in here" or the very popular "You all cut that out!" But seriously, what could a teacher say in those situations?

Face it, PDA was an accepted fact and maybe even a status symbol. As long as the action was kept to "darling little pecks" like one sophomore girl stated, PDA was acceptable, but the blatant love scenes were definitely out.

"I hate it when they're out there making out like they'll never see each other again, that's gross," said sophomore Valerie Clark.

With the ever-changing attitude towards the "blatant show of affection," a possible question of the future could be, "Did you study for the PDA test we're having second period?"

Meeting between classes, a sophomore couple shows their affection to one another. The faculty and administration did not think highly of this public display of affection.

Playing the same name game

Well, is it Tracy, Tracey, or Trayce? For many students, names often presented problems. If you were not lucky enough to have a simple name that everyone knew, then you were probably often frustrated, because your name ended up misspelled or mispronounced half the time.

Then there were the lucky ones. There were more than 16 Kims.

Other popular first names were Mike, Tommy, John, Michelle and Stacy. As far as last names go, Clark was the most common within the class with eight. Then came White, Smith and Anderson.

If the real thing didn't seem to fit, many students chose to go by middle and nicknames. Charles Waterbury prefered "Butch" and Jack Hubbard was better known as "Dobie." But, then after all what's in a name?

Bein' totally slang

"I am so sure!" I do not talk like a Valley Girl," were a few of the words that were used throughout the year.

Various sayings became popular with many students, producing different languages and codes between people. These were some of the phrases that were used daily within many lifestyles:

I'M SURE - to be positively certain about a subject.

TOTALLY - to the fullest extent.

GRODY TO THE MAX - to the maximum point, usually referring to a grotesque subject.

GAGME WITH A SPOON - to insert an eating utensil in which to muffle or suppress oneself.

WENCH - usually related to girls with butgoing reputations.

TAKE OFF - to evacuate rapidly in a sense of being told to do so.

BLOW IT OFF - to obliterate from the memory of a person.

FOR REAL - to conceive into a state of actuality.

BUSTED - to be taken custody of by an officer of the law.

SO FINE - putting a male or female in a category distinguishing them to be very desirable.

COME HOME, LASSIE - a statement expressed to refrain someone from being ignorant.

BACK AT THE RANCH-to return back to the familiar subject being in an unconcerned state of mind.

BEAM ME UP SCOTTY - the intense desire to be elsewhere.

TUBULAR - being of outstanding quality.

Maybe someday

Cars... everybody knew they were needed. But what about sophomores who couldn't drive? Were they lost without them?

First of all they had to get to school.
"I don't have a car, so I walk to school, but it's o.k.," Jimmy Simpson said.

The lucky ones had friends who drove, so they could get rides, but still it wasn't the same as owning your own car.

Greg Johnston agreed: "Now I depend on rides so I'm anxious to get my license."

But for people who lived too far away to walk and who couldn't get rides, there was only one thing left; the schoolbus.

"I hate it," complained John

Summerford, "It picks us up from the bus stop at 7:15 a.m. and I get to school at 7:40 a.m. I can't go out for lunch until I get my license."

As going out for lunch seemed to be more attractive to many people than eating the cafeteria food, the happy few who could drive saw their cars suffering under the weight of a bunch of hungry sophomores.

"I take about 15 of 'em out for lunch every day," commented Lee Ann White.

But nobody ever died of the lack of a car and for everybody the day of the drivers-test came eventually.

Emerging from the bus, Jon Hudson is ready for another day of school. In the morning the school bus arrived long before school started. After school, some students had to wait until after 4 p.m. to be picked up.

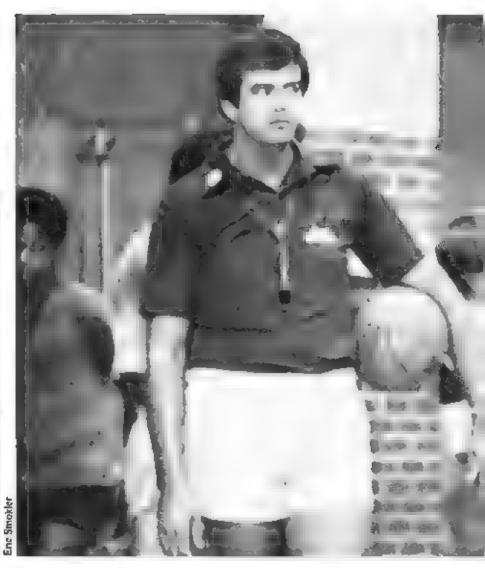

Starting his moped, John Cheatham prepares to go home. Many sophomores, too young to get their drivers incenses, drove motorbikes to school.

A great moment'

The year brought many smiles to the faces of teachers.

Mr. Paul Anderson commented, "Hove teaching at Lamar and associating with the students and faculty." He added, 'Overall, I am very proud of our school."

Whether it was being a sponsor of an organization, having the satisfaction of "Getting to coach my first junior varsity football game, and winning, was one of my greatest moments", exclaimed Mr. Ken Webb.

As student teacher Mr. Les Hunter put it, "My happiest moment was when the girl in the back of the room was finally quiet."

articipating in the spirit, faculty members fill in or the seniors when they boycotted the pep rally.
It is any teachers used this as a way to get involved out their students.

Acting as a Bell Ruider, Ms. Tena Ward participates in the faculty skit at the Homecoming pep rally Several teachers starred in this single skit of the football season.

Cracking an egg, Ms. Joan Harris, demonstrates the technique to her students in Home Economics. "When I finally came to the day where I could organize my work, was my greatest moment," said Ms. Harris.

Munching, Ms. Carolyn Brannen attends the annual Laun Club picnic. The Laun Club held many activities throughout the year, including the Christmas toga party and senior send-off dinner, all of which were attended by Ms. Brannen.

Proofreading an article by editor James Geiser, Ms. Susan Skibell stays after school to coordinate last minute details for The Scroll. Sponsoring both the newspaper and yearbook staffs meant often working after hours.

Taking advantage of the teachers' food day in the homemaking living room, Ms. Connie Echart, Ms. Linda Beseda and Ms. Sandy Schroeder prepare to eat the Halloween goodies. Several teachers' "Goodie Days" were sponsored throughout the year by the faculty advisory committee, which consisted of teachers from various departments.

Conferring, NHS sponsors Ms. Yleen George and Ms. Sherry Brannon organize the tutoring program, while Math-Science team sponsors Ms. Wilma Hill and Ms. Ronda McNew review a tournament Number Sense test. Sponsoring NHS required coordinating activities such as the trip to Sesame Place with retarded children, while sponsoring the Math Science team entailed many long Saturdays that began with doughnuts in the van at 6:30 a.m.

Eight hours aren't enough

Wouldn't it be great to be a teacher? As soon as that final bell rang, you would beat the 5 p.m. traffic home and leave your work behind, right? Wrong!

Contrary to popular belief, most teachers worked many more hours than people with 9 a.m.-5 p.m. jobs, usually for little or no additional pay. In addition to teaching within the classroom between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m., most teachers sponsored some club, organization or team.

Often, this responsibility required much time and effort.

For example, besides conducting the first period cheerleading class, Ms. Vicki Chauncey, sponsor, also stayed after school three days a week during football season for cheerleading practice. In addition, during the summer while the cheerleaders prepared for the coming year, she or Ms. Nancy Erickson supervised the girls in the mornings from 6-8 a.m.

"One of us goes to cheerleading camp in the summer," added Ms. Chauncey.

Other instructors, such as coaches, taught subjects which required a heavy amount of overtime.

Ms. Share Bailey, drama coach, reported, "For 'You Can't Take It With You,' because of all the sets and rehearsals, I sometimes didn't get home until 10:30 at night."

Sports coaches also worked many late nights for practices and games.

Besides sponsoring clubs or coaching, many teachers belonged to professional organizations which demanded their time.

For example, Ms. Yleen George, English teacher, belonged to the Texas State Teachers Association as well as the National Council of Teachers of English.

"We are having a January workshop here at Lamar. I will be helping to prepare with the room set-up and other logistics."

Furthermore, Ms. George helped to write the English Curriculum Guide.

"That requires that I be away from the classroom on several days," stated Ms. George.

A more obvious time-consuming aspect of teaching was grading homework each night, mapping lesson plans and, of course, averaging grades.

Despite the amount of time required, teaching had many benefits. In addition to experiencing the pure joy of guiding students, teachers could always look forward to weekends and summers. Come May, it was "Thank Goodness It's Summer!" to teachers as well as students.

Napping with the teddybears, Mr. Holmes Brannon, Senior Class sponsor, cuddles prizes for top magazine sellers during the week of sales. Mr Brannon, like many teachers, spent much time and energy working outside the classroom.

Not just a bunch of books?

What was surrounded by glass, held limitless information and acted as a home base for faculty members? The library.

This nucleus of the school aided not only students, but helped the faculty in numerous ways. It was where the teachers reported for faculty meetings during conference periods or after school.

According to the new librarian, Ms. Susanne Craig, teachers relied heavily on the library for checking out equipment. This equipment available to all teachers included projectors, cassette recorders, record players, overhead projectors and even a video cassette recorder-which was always in high demand.

Early mornings, late afternoons and conference periods often found teachers copying tests and other assignments on the faculty xerox machine.

"The first Six Weeks, it went out for two days. Teachers resorted to using the old duplicate machine, transparencies, and the blackboard," reported Ms. B. B. Stumbaugh and Ms. Marian Corey, librarian aides.

Also, the reference room was often reserved.

"Teachers bring their classes in for research projects and we put books on reserve for them,"commented Ms. Craig.

Furthermore, certain club sponsors

According to Ms. Lynda Reeve guidance counselor, the ASVAB militar test was given in the library, as well a sophomore and new studer orientations.

At any rate, while the student substituted the library for lunch durin semester exams week or when a them paper was due, teachers used it as the way-station between classroom an faculty lounge.

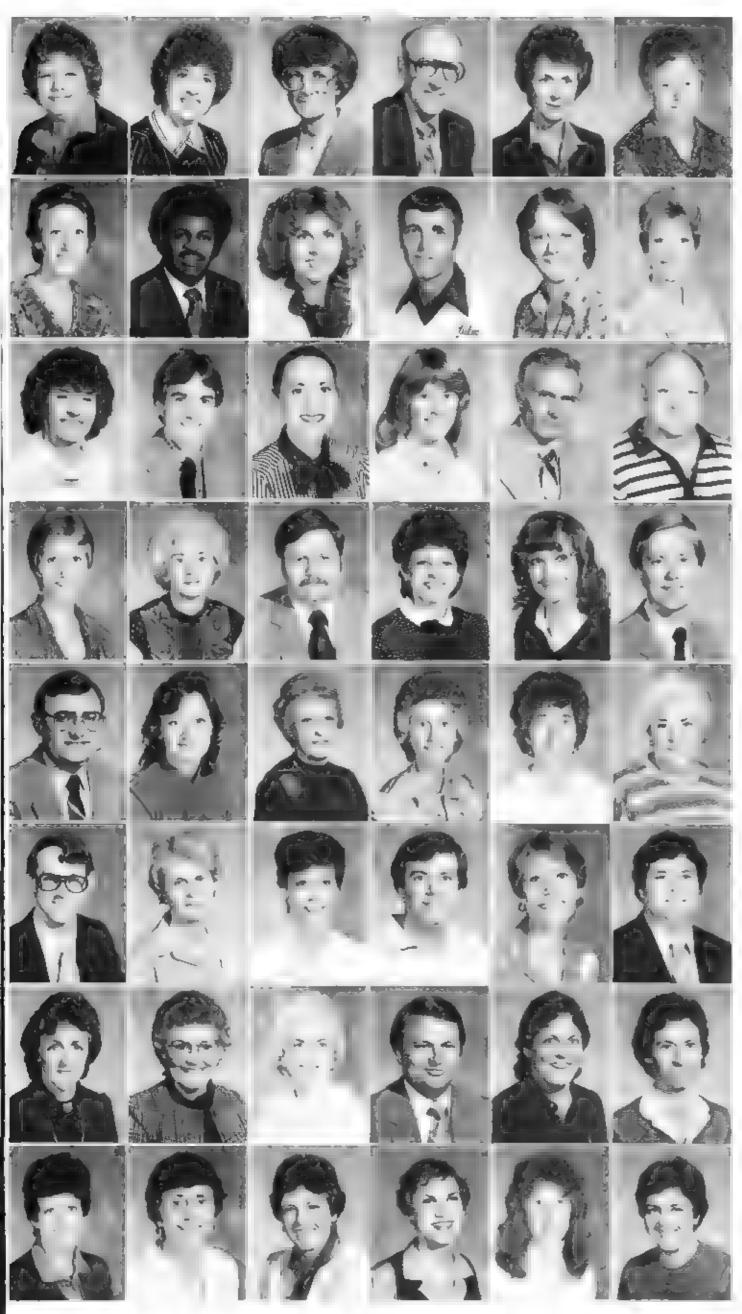

Making use of the faculty xerox machine, Mx Bernice Reid copies assignments for her classes. Although librarian aides were responsible for this gask in the past, teachers copied their own material of the first time this year

Librarian aide Ms. Marian Corey checks out a record player to Ms. Geraldine Trostel. There were approximately 200 pieces of equipment available to teachers in the library

Cheers to faculty

Whatever the case may have been, whether it was participating in pep rallies, going to games, (even when there were papers at home to grade), or buying Viking paraphernalia, the faculty always stood behind its Vikings.

"Our faculty has always been pro-school spirit," said Latin teacher, Ms. Carolyn Brannen," and this year is no exception."

At the Homecoming pep rally, the teachers presented a skit, (with the help of "E. T."), and "spooked" other schools in the district with their tricks and treats.

The LHS faculty showed support and spirit by wearing blue and gold on game days and sporting decorative ribbons with "Lamar Faculty" and other spirited phrases on them.

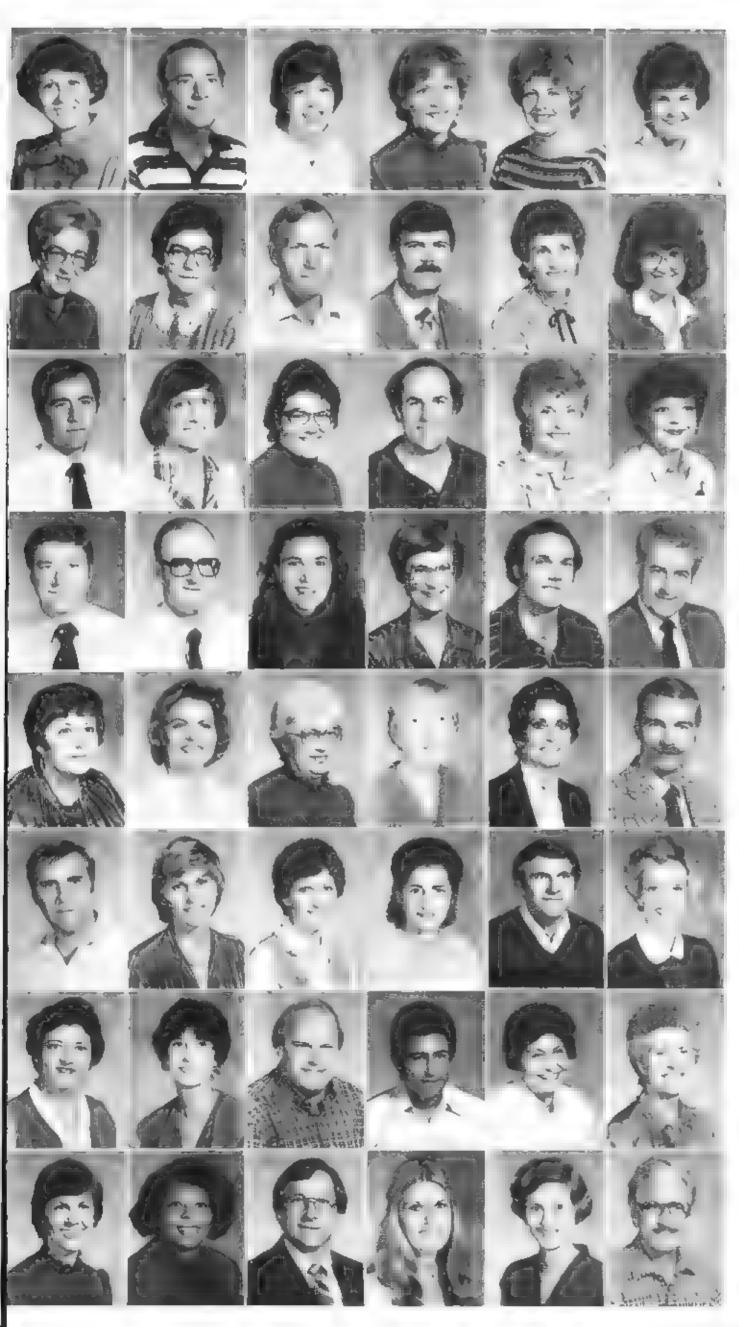

As Vice Principal Jimmy Jones put it, "We have a larger percent of faculty participating in our school activities than most other schools, and that is school spirit to me."

"Are these Vi-Queens?" No, it is Ms. B B. Stumbaugh, Ms. Jane Borland, Ms. Shirley Wood, Ms. Tena Ward, Ms. Alice Petersen and Ms. Linda Beseda, demonstrating their "talents" in a Friday morning pep rally. Many teachers participated in various chants like "Eat 'em up."

Being top dog

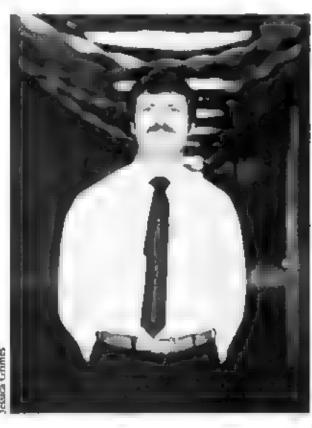

What the heck is an administration? Well, to start with, it was a group of hard workers that consisted of Principal Weldon English, Vice Principal Dee Didriksen, Vice Principal in charge of girls, Ann Stockton, and last but not least, a new face in the crowd, Jimmy Jones, Vice Principal in charge of boys.

Mr. Jones commented on the administration as being very receptive. He came to Lamar from Bowie High School.

Just one of the many decisions made be the administration was to "do away" with the tardy tables. Teachers complained that it took away from class time when student has to wait in line for a tardy pass. Instead, tardy sheets were distributed to the classrooms for the convenience of both teachers and students.

Like student, like teacher

"Class, please take your seats so that I can take roll," the instructor requested.

The students sat down and the teacher began to call out names:

"Ms. Jame Deterly, Ms. Lillian Johnson, Mr. Russell Meyer," etc. . . .

No, the students hadn't rebelled and taken over the school; some teachers simply chose to go back to school.

Why would they have done such a thing? For many it was to receive a Master's Degree. But being a teacher didn't make it any easier.

Ms. Jovce Smith, business teacher, said, "Since it had been 20 years since I had been to school, it was challenging to me."

Teachers went back for a variety of reasons.

Drama teacher, Ms. Sharte Bailey, said, "I went straight through from my Bachelor's to my Master's taking off only the summer session. I was unable to find a teaching job in my field, and I knew an MA would help me in the long run."

"The work I did and knowledge I gained had a great deal of practical value for the classroom," said Ms. Betty Fritz, Spanish teacher.

English teacher, Ms. Yleen George who Women's attending Texas University, said, "I believe administrators directly determine the quality of education in a school. I would like the opportunity to make the important decisions of administrators."

However, these were not the only reasons teachers went back to school And, they didn't always return to get additional degrees or certificates.

Latin teacher, Ms. Carolyn Brannen, said, "Last summer I attended the University of Texas for a two and a half week Latin course in poetry, I am teaching a Latin III class for the first time, and I wanted to be well-prepared."

No matter what the reason, it did seem a little strange to think of teachers sitting in desks and turning in homework.

Standing at the front of the room, Ms. Linda Fry lectures to her Biology II class. She attended UTA at night and during the summer to receive her Sitting in his desk, Mr. Vince Dannis takes a night class at UTA. This was Mr. Dannis's first year at Dressed up, Todd Ellington gives an oral report on Albert Einstein. The reports were an assignment after the class attended an exhibit on creativity at the Fort Worth Museum of Science and History.

Studying their handlwork, these Junior Honor English students read their Puritan newspapers. The newspapers were made by small groups and had everything from headline news to a crossword puzzle.

ACADEMICS

School days, school days

The assignments came and went, and so did the challenges that every student faced.

For each that was met, a victory was captured.

These became the highlights in the high school years of students. For some they were the big events: receiving a scholarship or graduating in the Top 12.

However, what would be most remembered were the little things. Like when a student had spent weeks on his junior theme and finally typed the last period or when a student brought up his grades enough to get his car back.

There was managing not to cause an explosion during a chemistry lab or successfully dissecting a frog in biology without getting sick.

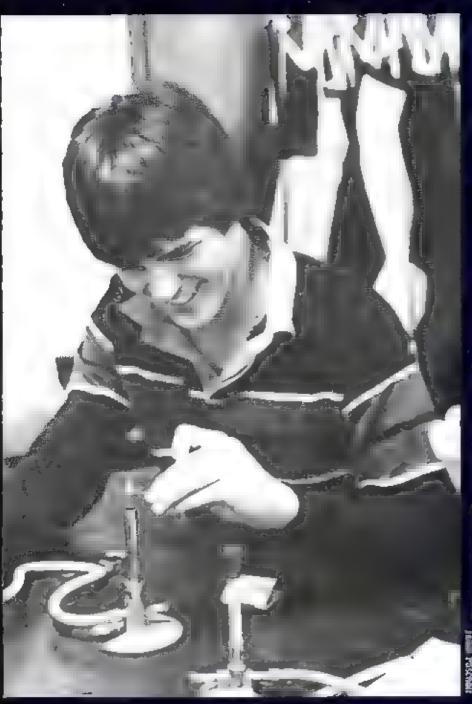

After spending hours on one trig problem, the answer finally made itself clear. Or when that sentence in German which had been unable to be translated suddenly became possible.

There were A's on those major exams which had seemed to be certain failures or 100's on pop quizzes.

There was working on a special project.

Each student had his own victories, but they all came under the heading of "great moments."

Work - to use effort or energy to do something, Together - with one another.

Throughout the year, students had the opportunity to work together instead of setting out on a task alone.

Group projects included skits as well as everyday work in the classroom.

For instance, try lighting a Bunsen burner, holding two test tubes and pouring sulfuric acid at the same time. Students were assigned partners with whom they did labs.

Checkin' out the reports

All students, at some time or other, encountered reports, whether they were report cards, lab reports, oral reports or written reports.

Which was better - oral or written?

"It all depends on the subject," reported junior Susan Heath. "In English, I'd rather write one, but in all other classes. I prefer oral reports. The main disadvantage, though, is that when it's written - they can grade you on grammar and structure."

Junior Alan Richbourg felt that one of the advantages of a written report was "being able to express any thought without direct criticism from people in the class." He added that the advantages of oral reports were that "it usually takes less time, and it's graded less carefully."

Laura Heisch, a speech student, preferred written reports "because I'm nervous in front of people."

In contrast, Kay Culbertson and Rob Wick, who both competed at speech tournaments, favored oral reports. Why?

"Because I don't have to worry about misspelled words, and I can ad-lib better than I can write. Also, in front of people, my thoughts flow better," reported Kay.

Rob added, "I don't like either. But of the two, I prefer oral reports because I can make a rough draft and know exactly what I have to say."

Which were more beneficial? The general response was that both were important because students would need both writing and speaking skills in their adult lives.

At any rate, students did not only encounter oral assignments and written papers, which included lab reports. There was another kind of report, to which all other reports led: report cards.

So, whether students preferred oral reports or written, most were required to do both, and the individual performance on these assignments affected the outcome or report cards.

Adjusting her aviator gloves, sophomore Billye Wallace prepares to impersonate Amelia Earhart for her English class. Each student in a regular English II class presented an oral report depicting the subject of a biography he or she had read.

Observing a gas experiment in Chemistry L, students wait for a salt ring to form and prepare to write about it. Almost all chemistry experiments involved turning in a written lab report.

Researching in the library, American History students Lynn Chupp, Karen McDowell. Donald Bishop, Tracy Tucker and Lesa Parish prepare to deliver oral reports about the 1920s under Mr James Bell's supervision. Teachers often provided class time in the library when reports had been assigned.

Examining their report cards, students in Ms. Marge Withelm's Computer Math class review their semester grades. For the first time, students received computerized report cards with their GPA's printed on them.

Reporting on big businessmen of the 19th century, junior Tammy Elliot discusses banking tycoon J.P Morgan. Many history teachers required their students to complete one report or other special project each six weeks

Half classes: double fun?

Can a semester course really teach you everything you want to know? Can the teachers really pack it all into a concise 18-week package?

Usually, no. No one could ever learn all there is to know about psychology, child development or sociology even if they studied it for a whole year. But for the most part, semester courses gave students a basic understanding of the subject in order to generate interest that might lead to further study.

Several semester courses were keyed to special interests of the students. Classes such as Home Management, Business Law and Data Processing were taken as electives.

Some half-year classes however, were required: One semester of Health plus one-and-a-half of P E.

Senior English classes were also semester electives. Seniors could pick from Dramatic Lit., Grammar/Comp., Developmental Reading, World Literature or Practical Writing. This gave them the opportunity to explore various aspects of English without going into depth.

Sometimes a semester just wasn't enough. Computer Math was changed from half year to full year. Students learned the same but at a slower rate for better retention

Junior Ricky LeRoy and senior Paula Krasselt took semester classes so they "wouldn't get as bored" with the same class all year. Sophomore Tim Clarke stated, "I wanted to get Health over with and take a fun course after that."

Rapping in the hall, senior Kevin Clarke, Ms. Glenda Mitchell and other Home and Family Living students study. This class helped prepare students for marriage and family life.

ABUS AUSTROLI

"Break out the props and get into costume."

Actually, it was instructions from a teacher to those students who were performing a skit in class.

Skits became more and more popular as they gave students, we well as teachers, something different to do.

Mr. James Bell said, "I like to give the students an assignment that they can enjoy and that I'll enjoy too," "It's a fun way to learn new things, but it does take some time and work to prepare," said junior Alvy Devia.

Junior Suzy Deffeyes added. "Watching students get up and act things out was better than reading about them in a book."

Skits could be used in classes ranging from history to the foreign languages to drama.

So . . .

"Dim the lights and get this show on the road."

Taking part, Home and Family Living students carry out a mock wedding. This was probably the most claborate skit as everything from a formal gown and veil to a traditional cake and reception were incorporated

Reading menus. Robbie Lauderdale and Matthew Klocsel make their choices as Blas Uribe waits to take their order. The pretend restaurant scenes were used to teach German I students how to order in that language.

Portraying Pompeia and Julius Caesar, Alvy Devia and Brad McCool use a skit to explain the divorce between the two characters. This was part of the background for Cicero in Latin III

Wearing western and army clothes, John McDade and Steve Befort present a skit on the 1920s for history. For this assignment, the students had a choice of either doing a skit, oral report or research

Standing in front of the class, Jeff Kokinda gives an oral report on Daniel Boone. In hopes of a better grade, students often dressed up and talked from the point of view of the subject

Writing trig functions on the board in her math class, senior Kristine Spence displays her keen memorizational powers. Being able to memorize as well as apply formulas was essential in most math courses.

Cheerily frustrated, junior Tara Whitehead separates her history test into two halves. While comprehension of events was important, American History required a certain amount of memorization of people, places and things in order to do well Sweating it out, marching band members practice in summer for the upcoming football season. Marching band, like many academic courses, also required memorization, because players had to learn steps and formations.

Down memorization lane

"Please Excuse My Dear A unt Sally," begged ROY G BIV.

"Do as you otter; add acid to water."

Aah, memorization! It was everywhere, especially in math and history. Students were constantly bombarded with facts, words, numbers and dates to memorize.

This method of learning was sometimes criticized by students. Why?

"I think that memorization is more a way of cramming for a test to make the grade than it is a way of learning," stated junior Susan Hargis.

Junior Dana Gibbs added, "I think it is less useful than learning the application of a principle, because memorized lists are easily forgotten."

According to Ms. Ronda McNew, algebra teacher, "Memorization is a good exercise for your mind because whatever you store in your head is yours forever. No one can take it away. Math formulas can always be looked up, but something becomes a part of you when it is memorized."

Mr. Vince Dannis, history teacher, said that, while students were not usually asked to remember dates, they were sometimes required to learn chronological order "to prevent confusion and also to help students to be able to follow the pattern formed by a chain of events. Without dates, sometimes events and relationships are unclear."

Moreover, history teacher Ms. Lynda Alexander stated, "My students are required to memorize very few dates maybe four or five each year. I would prefer that my students understand events as they relate to each other. However, some knowledge of important dates like Dec. 7, 1941; July 4, 1776; and Oct. 12, 1492; are part of the body of knowledge that all educated people are expected to know."

So, while memorization did not seem to be a true form of learning, it was a point of reference in history by which to relate events.

While students mostly expressed negative opinions of it, teachers point out the purpose and advantages of memorization. Regardless, it was an aspect of education that both students and teachers utilized

So always remember and don't ever forget, "King Phillip Came Over For a Good Steak!"

Memorizing, senior Kristin Hughes recalls the different oxidation numbers of elements for one of many oxidation quizzes in chemistry. Any student in Ms. Wilma Hill's Chemistry I classes who made straight 100's on the routine quizzes throughout the year won a steak and lobster dinner, compliments of Ms. Hill

Typing, sophomore Dina Housewright tries to avoid tooking at the keys. Learning to type accurately and quickly necessitated memorizing the placement of typewriter keys

Learning parts of the body, German students demonstrate on juntor Jim Nenow, while playing Stmon Says. Language classes often played games to learn vocabulary words.

Speaking about different kinds of English, Ms. Marilyn Critzer talks at the Junior Orientation. A choice of eight senior English classes could have been taken. These included World Literature, Grammar and Composition, Dramatic Literature and Developmental Reading.

Big talk?

Why would someone want to take a language if they already knew one? Here is what some students said:

"It's kind of neat learning how other people communicate," stated senior Pam Thompson.

Sophomore Robbie Lauderdale commented, "I think German is truly an inspiring language."

Junior Sarah Thompson and sophomores Stacy Watt and Patricia Fenner liked taking Latin because it helped them with their English vocabulary.

But foreign languages weren't the only thing related to learning how to talk.

English and Speech were also taken by many students. Ms. Alice Petersen stated, "Speech is extremely helpful in other classes. It gives students confidence in their communicating ability, so that they feel better about participating in class."

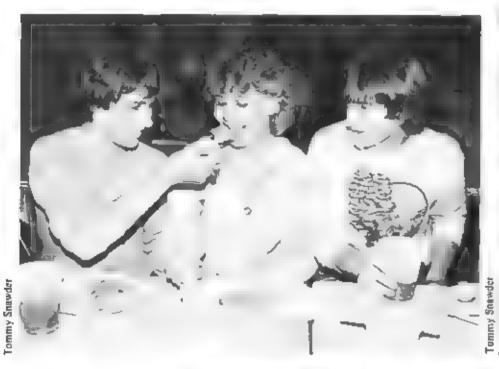

Tennis anyone? Sophomore Trey White poses as a tennis pro for an oral report. Sophomore English classes helped students develop good public speaking skills.

Looking up, Kevin Brown briefly discontinues his work in Business Law. Many students enjoyed this class because it prepared them for life in the business world.

Taking a bite, Mike Morigi, Pam Thompson and Mark Moore munch out on Spanish tasting day. Activities like this provided fun breaks for students during the year Doing their lab reports, Kevin Loftin and Tim Clarke gaze into the insides of a worm in Biology I Many students enjoyed biology because of the labs which included dissections.

It's all just a matter of taste

The teacher. The subject. The other students.

There were as many reasons why students liked certain classes more than others as there were students.

Dane McKaughan's favorite class was Speech III because "the blackboards are green."

Robert Frakes said, "I love trig. Nothin' I love more than postulates and theorems."

"I love trig more, if that's possible. I'd rather do eight hours of trig homework than just about anything," continued Bryan Hill,

Richard Dwyer chose German II.

"It's my favorite class because we have an excellent teacher and during the year we've gotten to be at the point of mastering conversational German," he said.

Some students appreciated the usefulness of a class.

As Alan Richbourg put it, "I like Computer Math because you can be creative and teach yourself a usefull skill."

As can be seen, there was something for everyone: the curriculum or the challenge or the projects or the . . .

Fitting parts together, Dennis Brown and Mark Davis overhaul a lawnmower engine. Power Mechanics provided students with a mechanical knowledge that could be used as a career or at home.

Sparking interest

"Where should I plot this oil rig?"

"Do I need to alter the waist or should I just take up the length?"

"How many errors can I make and still get an 'A'?"

Many electives provided students with opportunities to explore subjects that might appeal to them as careers or simply to learn about or accomplish something which they enjoyed.

One such elective, Geology, offered these benefits to those students who were intrigued.

"Geology is very important to anyone interested in going into the field of petroleum products because you have to plot oil rigs and you become an expert at doing contour maps of land and rock formations. It's also fun," reported junior Barbara Jensen

In addition, business courses such as Typing, Shorthand, Business Law and Accounting helped prepare students for life after high school.

Ms. Lavinia Atchley, Business Department Chairman said, "Business courses provide individuals with marketable skills, as well as help them successfully manage their personal business."

Homemaking also prepared students for their post high school years by offering personal skills to students.

What aspect of homemaking was of greatest importance?

"Mostly the sewing because now I know how to sew and can make my own clothes, and that will always save money," replied junior Mary Cay Raz, a Homemaking I student.

Other students benefited from practice in cooking, furnishing, child care, etc.

Overall, Lamar provided a variety of elective courses which catered to a broad spectrum of interests, ranging from personal to career-oriented.

So, whether a student wanted to spend one hour of his day for 175 school days learning to cook and sew or studying rock formations, he could pick and choose according to his needs and interests.

Painting, senior San Williams creates the back drop for an Art I puppet show. Art classes allowed students to explore their creative interest as well as have fun.

Canght in the act, Tracey Luke flashes an unallowed wad of gum as she types. Typing students often transferred directly from the classroom to summer clerical work.

Working diligently, sophomore Jim Cole makes a table in wood shop. Students could make projects like tables or stools, etc., to take home when finished.

Using their artistic abilities, sophomores Sharon Short and Thomas Basley work on projects in commercial art. Not only did these students learn to draw better, they also learned to design and plan Stitching away, sophomore Cecily Boyette works on a piece of clothing in homemaking. Most boys in this class made aprons instead of other clothing.

Worth the wait

Monday: Just one week? There's no way!

Tuesday: I better start to work, but there's a good movie on cable. Besides, I've got all the time in the world.

Wednesday: I would start it today but the soccer team is playing tonight and I promised I'd show some school spirit.

Thursday: Oh my gosh! My project is due tomorrow! If only I had just a few more days . . .

Friday: Ummm, well, would you believe I left it at home?

Ahh, the sad story of long term projects.
The decision was whether to go ahead and start it or blow it off until there was nothing better to do. Here are what some students said:

"I put my drama project off until the last minute because if I don't, I sacrifice partying time on the weekends," stated senior Kevin Clarke.

"Long term projects take up too much time especially when you don't have class time to do it in," said Chris Buckner.

These projects or papers weren't all written though. For instance, in commercial arts, students designed a restaurant all the way from the building to the menus and and matchbooks. In history classes, reports or displays were often made on past heros. Others were reports on Shakespeare's plays in English and drama, working with congressmen in American Government and of course, the Junior Theme.

Teachers often liked long-term projects because they taught students to utilize their time and make time for homework.

Assistant editor Karen McKenzie strolls out of the journalism room. The Scroll staff published 14 issues that were distributed to all students.

Putting it together

Sur those ingredients, cut that wood, mix those paints . . .

Throughout the year, homemaking students mixed, chopped and baked their way through class, eating the foods which they prepared. They also concocted different kinds of goodies.

For instance, Homemaking I students were required to sew one article of clothing which would fit them. Each person in Home Furnishings was assigned an individual project which consisted of decorating a whole house. Students used samples of different fabrics and did one room at a time.

Shop students put together various pieces of furniture. Drafting students worked throughout the year to learn the skills needed to draw up a house. Their major project was to sketch an actual blueprint of a home. In Power Mechanics, students had to bring in their own broken engine and overhaul it.

Speech I students learned to be comfortable while talking in front of others. More advanced students were on the tournament team and spent time cutting articles out of magazines in preparation for debates and other competitions.

Art students were busy, too. Art 1 constructed a puppet theater. Others worked with clay, airbrush techniques, package designs and linoleum tile printing - just to name a few.

Meanwhile, every student was concerned with making the grade or making it to class on time.

Now where were we?

. . . put it all together and see what you've got.

Studying, Jim Jewell, Scott Mohon, Wade Henderson and Barry Yeatts read up on shop techniques. These were important since the students worked with power tools.

Cutting into the meringue, Ms. Joan Harris serves a piece to Michael Henson. Homemaking students were allowed to select the menus which they prepared.

Looking up from his canvas, Darwin Brown takes a breather as Steve Befort continues to work industriously. Both students were working on their three-dimensional projects in Art III

On Awards Day, 30 students were recognized for achievements with Who's Who awards from their teachers.

Choir - Jami Tucker: "Jami's school activities centered around the Choral Department. As she so often stated, 'Musicismy life!' She has a beautiful voice and is a very good musician, was in the Region Choir two years and All-District Choir one year, always made a 1 on UIL solos, and was outstanding in the Madrigal Singers. As a senior, she was secretary for the Varangian Choir," Ms. Rowena Taliaferro.

Band - Suzie Warden: "Suzie received the band Who's Who because of her dedication, leadership and service to the Viking Bands during her three years at Lamar," Mr. Steve Musser.

Band (Jazz) - Brad Harper: "Brad had been a leader for the entire jazz program here at Lamar. Through his professional playing experiences, he has matured as a musician and as an individual. To put in terms musicians can understand - he keeps good time," Mr. Bill Chester.

Orchestra - Cloyce Stetson: "Cloyce Stetson was chosen Who's Who for his outstanding leadership and musicianship for the past three years," Mr. Royce Coatney.

Commended as outstanding in the area of Speech/Drama were Suzanne Seifert. Christic Roberts and David Daniels

Chosen for their musical attributes were Cioyce stetson, Susie Warden, Brad Harper and Jami Fucker

The top really isn't so lonely

French - Chris Buckner: "Chris is an industrious person who puts all his strength and effort into everything he does. He has served the French Club well for the past two years. He is a very dedicated person who really cares about Lamar. I have enjoyed working with him." Ms. Darlene Alford.

German - Ronald Judd: "Ronald has been an outstanding student of German for three years. He's the type of student who has all his work complete, plus. He has also participated in numerous German contests and always done well He is very deserving of this recognition," Ms. Rudi Buechlein.

Latin - Pat Sutton: "Consistent in his participation in Latin Club, outstanding as a student in all three years of Latin, and enthusiastic in support of all things classical - Pat is the obvious choice for Who's Who in Latin," Ms. Carolyn Brannen.

Spanish - Hiram Jackson: "An A average for four years of Spanish. Outstanding work in reading literary classics in the original form, outstanding research in preparing and presenting a report on Spanish music through the centuries with recorded examples of many different types. Consistently uses Spanish in class," Ms. Betty Fritz.

Speech-Suzanne Seifert: "Suzanne has an excellent command of the language when she is preparing speeches. Her logical mind has been invaluable to her as she has competed," Ms. Alice Petersen. Journatism (Newspaper) - James Geiser: "James has been great, a true extra-miler! His devotion to journalism and ability to work with his staffers made him an excellent editor. He implemented new ideas and designs that made The Scroll a quality publication," Ms. Susan Skilbell.

Photography - Louis Fuesko: "Louis' concern to produce quality photographs has benefited the Senior Class," Mr. Charles Ritchey.

Journalism (yearbook) - Dina Burton: "Serving as editor-in-chief, Dina has given numerous extra hours. She is conscientious and hard-working. Under her leadership the staff worked exceptionally well," Ms. Susan Skibell.

PhotoJournalism - Tommy Snawder: "Tommy was wonderful. Not only was his photography of outstanding quality, he was always happy to do whatever necessary to get the job done. He's one of the most talented and dependable photographers I've ever had on the staff," Ms. Susan Skibell.

"You're the top. You're the Tower of Commerce. All nine were selected by the Pisa. You're the top. You're the Mona Lisa."

To begin with, Jim Norcross and Cloyce Stetson earned the right to be named valedictorian and salutatorian, respectively. Jim studied his way to a 12.233 grade point average, while Cloyce got a 12.131.

Also, throughout the year, nine students were named as boy or girl of the month. The seven boys were honored by the Arlington Rotary Club and the girls by faculty and administration.

After capturing Sweepstakes for the third year in a row at district, 13 students advanced regionals competition. Of these, Donnie Frazier, Suzanne Seifert and Cloyce Stetson went on to the state level. Donnie placed fifth in feature writing, Suzanne was tenth in persuasive speaking and Cloyce came in eleventh in science.

Coming through with high scores on the SAT, 17 students were commended, 7 became semi-finalists and 6 received recognition as finalists.

All these students proved that they were the Women's Division of the Chamber of the top, in one way or another.

Receiving recognition at the Awards Assembly, Susan Spore, Dina Burton, Pam Thompson, Patty Curl, Joy Wilson, Ronald Judd, Eric Dietert, Jean Chuang, Robin Hatfield, Erica Dickinson, Cloyce Stetson and Jim Norcross make up the Top 12. At this time they were given gold cords which they wore at graduation.

A rough season

With Bowie being the first district game for the Vikes and the second game of the season, Lamar had to prepare early.

Before the season opened, Bowie, Trinity and Lamar were the top three picks to win district and were to all play each other within a three-week span.

Jeff Werner said he felt the Trinity game was the game of the season.

"Trinity was the high point of the season because we outplayed them and really beat them. It was the low point because of the official making that call at the end of the game to beat us."

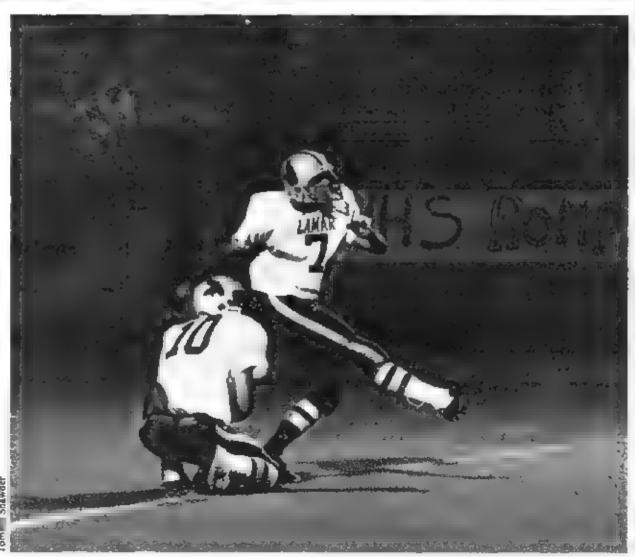

Werner was referring to the controversial call where Transty receiver Walt Zartman and Lamar cornerback Carl Ducato collided, but they flagged Ducato for interference.

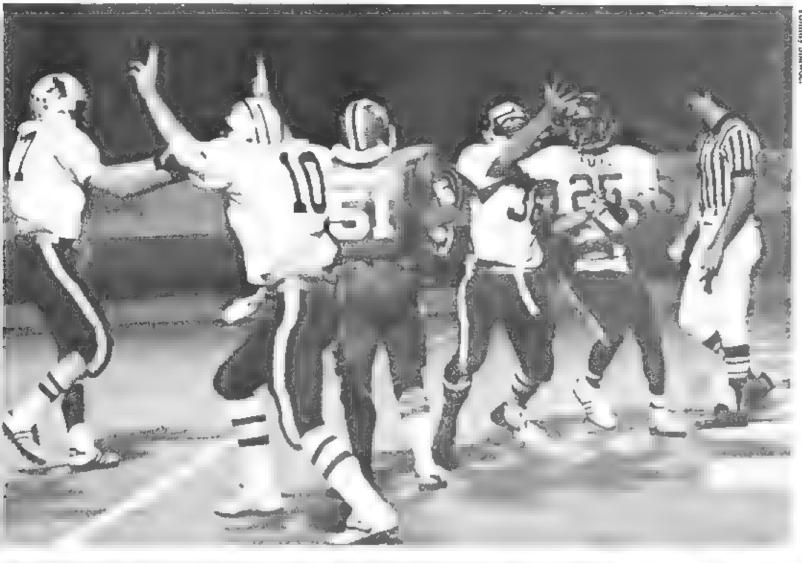

Jerry Davis said he though the best game was "the Bowie game because we stuck together - especially the defense. Our worst game was probably Bell because Bell didn't beat us, we beat ourselves."

JV, on the way

"This was the first year we went to the nine-team district. On the JV level, this was a great disadvantage to us because we started playing district games right away. Whereas before, we had three or four games to prepare," stated Coach Mike Pringle.

Although the team ended with a 3-7 record, Coach Pringle said that the group improved as the season progressed.

The players' opinion of their team varied.

Andee Russell stated, "We were good, but not everyone tried their hardest."

"We had a lot of good players," commented Brad Martin, "but, we didn't play as a team."

Mike Burch remarked, "There were too many kids and not enough coaches." Scott

Ivy added that "The coaching we had wa fine, but there wasn't enough."

Coach Pringle stated that several players were a great asset to the team. Andee Russell, Eric Stafford, Tommy Slotter, Bruce Koepp and Kevin Loftin He added that Daryn Roberts was the leading scorer and Tommy Slotter was the best defensive player.

The team suffered a loss of 20 players during the season. Sixty-eight players began the season and only 48 finished.

Coach Pringle remarked, "The ones who decided to stay, will be good football players."

Discussing plays, Coach Mike Pringle explains strategy to Andee Russell as Coach Dave DeHoff listens. The Vikings were narrowly defeated by the Texans, 10-12.

Crowding together, the versity players take a time out to discuss team strategy with Coach Becky Evans. The team ended with the season with a 3-13 record.

Vikes spike ball

Inconsistency seemed to be the key to this year's varsity volleyball team, Coach Becky Evans said.

There were only three returning senior players to the team. The Vikes were said to be a balanced squad which in some ways hurt the team

All teams competed in a round robin schedule enabling them to play all district schools twice. Winners of each game would be determined by the best two out of three games.

The varsity ended its year with a 3-13 season.

Vikes 'dig' game

There was only a minute and a half left on the time clock. Every girl on the team was fighting to keep the ball in the air. The score was tied 14-14. The tension increased as the time ticked lazily off the clock. The opposing team slacked off and fell behind 13-15. When the final buzzer sounded, the team who had worked to its potential was victorious.

Moments like these often occurred as the JV volleyball team romped through the season. Coach Cheryl Brown felt the season went fine.

"The team had good athletes with great potential." With 15 players, the team ended up even in district play. Sophomore Peggy Shane stated, "I felt we had a good team although we did not have a perfect season."

Relaxing, the JV volleyball team has a little fun before the game. The girls won third place in the Grand Prairie tournament.

The cross country team did not do as well as last year because the team lost most of its varsity team with the '82 graduating class.

The team did have a good season though. They worked out in the mornings before school often running for time. Team members also put in much mileage on their own at night.

In the district meet, newcomer to the district Trinity, along with Arlington High edged out Lamar for victories. Lamar finished the season with a close third place.

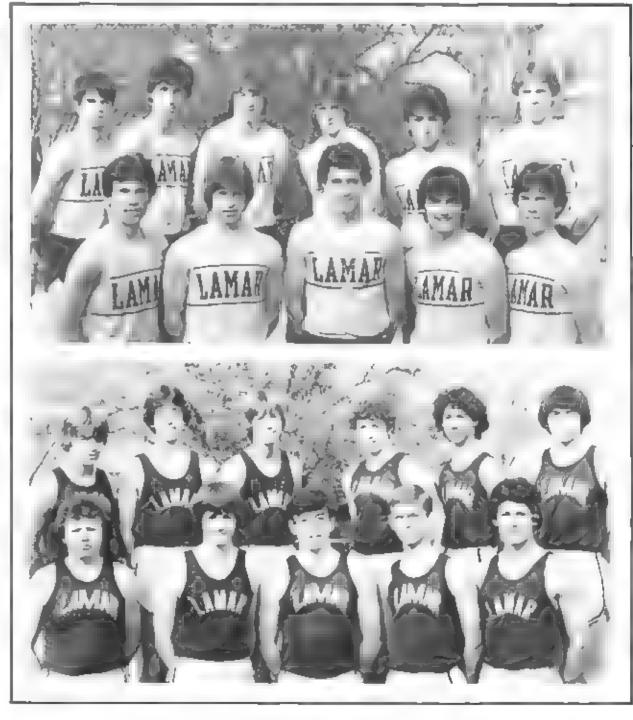

Side by side, Rob Korol and Tony Backus try to pass each other. The team practiced every day at 7:30 a.m. season were drowned in a sea of close losses as the varsity basketball team closed out the year with a 3-13 district record, 7-20 overall.

Led by senior postman Todd Locke, the Vikes jumped out to a surprising 2-1 start in district play, only to lose 12 of the last 13 games of the season.

Injuries contributed to part of the team's problems as Locke, the team's leading scorer missed two games with a sprained ankle. Junior Brian Hill, the Pre-season hopes for a successful team's leading rebounder, was lost for the season with a knee injury halfway through district play.

> The one point loss to Arlington High, the last game of the season, was typical of the frustrating year.

> While the 7-20 record was somewhat less than hoped for by team members, the Vikes easily topped last year's mark of 2-29. In addition to more wins, the Vikes also had more fans. According to Coach Dave DeHoff, "We had a good student following this year."

Listening, the JV team learns the strategy for the next series of play. The team season ended with 10 wins and 18 losses.

Other feelings were expressed by junior Steve Stewart. He explained, "We didn't win as many as we would have liked to. As a team we could never play an entire basketball game to OUT fullest potential."

This was the first year for Lamar to have a sophomore team, Coach Melton said, "When we played a team with just sophomores on it we played really well,"

The record for the sophomore team was 2-8. Coach Melton said Lamar plans to continue the new team. Sophomore Greg Cassels commented, "The sophomore team really helped me prepare for JV basketball. We had a lot of fun."

Just a mere free throw away

With a district title in mind, girls varsity basketball Coach Cheryl Brown and her team set out for their goal. However, they found their hopes diminished by some other teams who set out to do the same thing. However, Coach Brown felt that she was blessed with her team

"Like every coach, you want to win district and are disappointed if you don't. We have some very fine players which made it a great team not only because they were fine players but because they were very fine young ladies also."

Coach Brown said injuries were a big part of the season.

"We started out with the usual number of players but because of injuries it cut the number. We started slower than usual, too and it took us longer to get our timing together because of injuries.

"Then when we got it together we had more injuries."

Coach Brown said that the addition of Bell and Trinity made district tougher.

"It made the district much more competitive. We have a very strong district, one of the best in the state." She said she is optimistic about next year's team

"We will lose five seniors, however we will have three juniors returning from varisty. The JV did well this year plus they had height. We can use their height to go along with Susan Heath's 5'10"."

Finally, Coach Brown summed up by explaining her greatest moment this year.

"Beating Arlington has to always be the highlight of any season. Beating Arlington the last game of the season was a great way to end ours."

Aiming together

"There was not one real leader. They all got along and each person was a vital part of the team. Every girl had her own qualities and they performed well as individuals and as a team," said Coach Nancy Erickson of her girls JV basketball team.

Although Coach Enckson felt that the girls should have made more progress, they managed to place third in their district. Virginia Spence was named to the All-Tournament team at the City Tournament.

A member of the team, Denise Suarez, stated, "We had a slow start, but near the end of the season we managed to put it together. It was mainly because Coach Erickson was so patient and worked with us both individually and as a team."

Coach Erickson summed it up.

"The games were close, we should have won a lot of them. From where we started to where we ended, I was proud, because individuals played as a team."

First year kick-off

"Very successful" were the words Coach I.C. Little choose to describe the first season of girls soccer at Lamar.

The girls, with no experience as a team, captured first place in district, and then went on to be bi-district champs. However, they lost to North Mesquite 2-0 in the regional play-offs.

"I was kind of surprised we won district, but we worked hard," said Stacy Watt.

Coach Little agreed. "They worked very hard. They came together as a group and together they developed a winning attitude."

Coach Little added that the girls set a goal to win district and after losing their second game, they bounced back and won 11 games in a row.

The team boasted the most number of All-District players in the district. The first team claimed Carol Nix, Peggy Wheeler, Kristine Spence, Lisa Michell, Lesa Parish and Vicki Williams.

Kathy Cochrum, Felica Jolly, Claudia Kramer, Tracy Johnson and Carmen Garcia were named to the second team.

Spence was the district Offensive Player of the Year, Michell was the district Defensive Player of the Year and Wheeler was named Sophomore of the Year.

Watt said, "I'm ready for next year I know we'll go all the way to state!"

Riding on the strength of the girls singles and boys doubles, the tennis team captured third place in the spring individual district tournament.

Tory Plunkett won the girls singles championship, while Greg McQuitty and Fred McWilliams led the boys with their second place finish in doubles.

The Vikes' spring success came after a dismal performance in the fall as high wind, inexperienced girls and inconsistent play from the boys plagued the team throughout the season.

The Vikes struggled to a 3-4-1 record during team round-robin play and a first round loss to Arlington High in the team district tournament in October.

In addition to Plunkett, girls lettering were senior Hye-Sun Chang, junior Lezlie Walker and sophomeres Tracey Luke, Tracey Williams and Kim Thompson. A splashing season

The swimming season did not necessarily start off with a bang, but they ended as they usually did with a winning season. Last year's team was dominated by seniors, which caused a shortage of swimmers. That, a new coach along with a new workout routine, influenced this year's season.

Coach Mark Johnson added a weight program to strengthen the swimmers and tone them up. For the second year in a row, varsity practices were held at 6 a.m. at UTA, due to the shortage of pools. JV practices were held at 2:30 p.m. at Hugh Smith Recreational Center.

The girls swirn team went undefeated in district competition, and the boys swim team took second place. Junior Susan Hargis and senior Todd Pollard qualified for regional competition. Hargis also broke the school record in the 100 yd. breaststroke with a time of 1:10.50. Many other swimmers achieved their best times this year.

Getting ready to dive, Mark Baggett practices his starting block position. Even though many swimmers wanted to have a diving team, the coach said there would not be one this year Ending the season with a shutout against Sam Houston, the varsity baseball team finished 8-10-1 with a 4-9-1 record in district which was the best record since 1977.

"The baseball program has turned the corner, you can expect good things from baseball at Lamar," commented Coach Mike Pringle.

Lamar will have seven returning lettermen next year, including Brent McLendon, Robert Frakes, Jeff Wood Kennon Cogdel and Mike Patterson. Others are Matt Krzysiak, Greg Lane and Stan Hase. "The Vikes lost six one-run ballgames which could have gone either way," said Coach Pringle.

"The fifth inning was usually the worst inning because that is where the team gave up a lot," he added.

Individuals making the All-City team were catcher Mike Hamilton, pitcher Jeff Clark and third baseman Dwight Sobczak. In district, first team members were Hamilton, Sobczak and second baseman Tommy Titus.

Second team was Jeff Clark who finished with a 5-3 record. Honorable mention was given to Mike Patterson, Jeff Wood, Robert Frakes, Wade Schneider, Greg Elhott and Jason Watson. The stolen base record was broken by Titus with 37 and Watson with 29. The team finished the season with a 252 batting average.

Overcoming youth, the Lamar track team managed to capture third place in district, with two competitors continuing on to regionals.

At the district meet, two school and eight class records were broken. Dan Withers and Kenneth Ankele broke school records in the 100 yard dash and the high jump. Jeff Ballow, Cy Bickers, Ankele, Matt Murray, Bobby Sign, Greg Lane, Mike Burch set class records. The 400 meter relay team composed of Lane, Bickers, Matt Gurley and Jeff Rogers broke their respective class records.

Coach Mike Nelson felt that the hurdles, long jump, high jump, pole vault, shot put, sprints and the relays were particularly strong points of the team.

Kevin Williams won first place in the 300 meter hurdles and Ricky LeRoy placed second in the long jump.

Coach Nelson said, "We had a young team, but they came on strong at district. Most of the kids had their best times there. Many of the kids who placed well will be returning next year. We're going to be fantastic next year!"

Attending the All Sports banquet, senior Leslie McPherson waits for her escort. McPherson was one of the outstanding runners according to Coach Nancy Erickson.

Season seems short but sweet

"The season was short because of spring break," stated Coach Nancy Erickson. The girls track team participated in three meets. Strong points consisted of the 1600 meter run, shot put and the discus throw, according to Coach Erickson.

"Considering the time and the people that participated on the team, I felt the Jan Schwarzenberger season was ok."

Coach Erickson said some of the outstanding track members were Trayce Orr, Susan Heath, Suzie Carson and Leslie McPherson. The team came second place in the city.

Gwen Phillips commented, "Even though the season was short, we had a good time."

Coach Enckson summed up the season when she stated that the girls got some well-rounded experience in their competition.

Having advanced to regionals, senior Jeannene Adams, and sophomore Trayce Orr journeyed to Lubbock for the meet. Orr ran the 1600 meter run and Adams threw the shot put.

Practicing, sentor Karen Jensen prepares for an upcoming meet. The team practiced before and after school.

Watch the 'birdie'

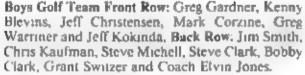

After getting off to a slow start, the Vikes rallied and played their best golf of the year to snag the district title for the fifth time in a row. The Vikes did not play very consistently all year, but had enough players shooting well at each tournament to always have a chance at victory.

The Vikes only had one returning senior, Steve Clark, in the top five. The rest of the team consisted of Chris Kaufman, Grant Switzer and Bobby Clark, all juniors. Greg Gardner was the only sophomore in the top five.

At district, the Vikes were like night and day. The first day's totals were the worst the team had shot all year and were more than 20 strokes out of first place. But when the dust cleared, the Vikes were on top and headed for regionals in Lubbock.

The team did not fare as well in the windy city, though. Members finished eighth in regionals.

According to Coach Jones, the regionals were just like state competition in that the winning team in their regionals went on to win state.

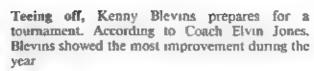

Swinging, Bobby Clark drives the ball down the fairway. Clark was a member of the All-District team

#1 Vikes N-person good

Athlete (ath'let') N-person good at sports and exercises requiring strength, speed, skill and endurance.

Almost anyone can call themselves an athlete, even if all they do is exercise with Richard Simmons in their living room. There is a difference between a "living room" athlete and a district athlete, and that's talent. Every year, several athletes at Lamar are recognized for outstanding achievements in sports by making the All-District team. The long practices, endless competition and the extra miles of running, seem to pay-off when an athlete receives All-District fame.

Chosen for second team basketball is Todd Locke. Honorable mention for boys basketball was Dominic DePonte.

Winning traditions

Vikings and sports awards go handin-hand. Throughout the years, various Lamar teams have won bi-district titles, with many of the players taking All-District awards.

Coaches from each school in the district nominated outstanding players from their schools. Then, the coaches from the other schools voted on these players to form All-District teams.

Making cents with dollars

Many of the special times and special events at Lamar didn't come cheap. There were trips to pay for, uniforms to buy and new equipment to acquire. Usually, the cash was raised by way of moneymaking projects.

The band and choir were able to take their annual trips because of fundraisers such as the band's spaghetti supper and the choir rummage sale.

Clubs were not the only ones who needed funds. The class councils and the Student Council were needy, too. The promethat all the seniors had looked forward to since the beginning of their sophomore year finally arrived. But not before the "traditional" magazine sale that raised more than $13,000 for the class.

Not all financial support came from within the school, however. Businesses bought ads in The Scroll, Valhalla and football programs to finance these publications. Likewise students supported the community by giving blood and a participating in the cancer Dance-a-thon.

As the year wore on, students became tired of being asked either to buy or sell anything. However, at least for seniors, no one complained when they shelled out those last few dollars for those final items: the cap and gown.

Adjusting the cap, a representative from School Pictures, Inc. helps Brett Watkins prepare for his portrait. Senior pictures were taken in August and can approximately $45 a package.

Gotting his jacket, Dale Hatter prepares for work at Six Flags. The minimum wage for employees at Six Flags was $3.25 per hour, 10 cents below the federal minimum wage.

YOUR BANK... A REFLECTION OF YOUR GOOD JUDGMENT

Banks may be a lot alike, true. But they're also very different.

They reflect the quality of their staffs on the one hand and on the other, the needs and desires of their customers and potential customers.

It's not by accident that you'll enjoy the most pleasant, comfortable banking surroundings in Arlington at First City National. The largest, fastest motor bank (21 lanes) in Arlington. Two 24-hour Teller 2/Pulse automated teller machines for cash around the clock. And, most important of all, people who really care about your business.

First City National . . . a reflection of your good judgment.

You've got a bright future. We'll do our part to help keep it that way.

Your generation will need as much electricity as is being used these days. Maybe more. We at Texas Electric are working to provide you with the electricity you'll need for college, your homes and your jobs.

In the past, we've used mostly natural gas and oil to make electricity. Today, we're making almost half of our electricity in plants built to use lignite coal. And, we're building a plant to make electricity using uranium fuel. By using these cheaper and more abundant fuels, we'll help keep your future looking bright.

Try Again

I'm tired of gloom, I'm tired of pain; I want to rejoin the world again. Life does proceed When a loved one leaves, But it is difficult for us Who are left to grieve. Today we will try To smile once more Death disappeared and left our door We'll make the effort To function again. It won't be easy As we well know, But we won't give up, The change made us grow. We loved him so much, And fate was unkind. He went away first; He left us behind. The pain in our heart Will remain for awhile, But yesterday's gone, Today we will smile.

-by Janna Henley

Brian McQuirk 1966-1982

Letting the good times roll

Contary to popular belief, life did not end with football season. The good times and big events kept on coming.

Collectively, the Vikes pulled together on a variety of occasions. We gave enough blood during the two-day Carter Blood Drive to win the award for the most donations. Our team danced away with a trophy for the most money collected during the Cancer Dance-a-thon.

During its first year in existence, the girls soccer team captured the district title after a season of winning play. Boys soccer, golf and swimming teams also advanced past district play. Both bands won superior ratings at competition in St. Louis, Mo. with several musicians winning awards for outstanding solos. In addition, the drill team also received a first place trophy at competition in Florida.

All in all, as everyone pulled together it was possible to do the impossible. We were able to keep the winning spirit alive at Lamar.

Standing with her class, Ms. Gerry Trostel shows off the Homecoming mum given to her by the students. For many, finding the right teacher seemed to make any class more enjoyable and something to remember

Posing, Kevin Arterburn and Kim Lane wait for their picture to be taken at Prom. The portraits at $6 a package were a perfect memento of that special evening.

Heading for the endzone, Matt Gurley sidesteps his opponent. Friday night football games provided most of the entertainment for students on fail weekends.

Representing the Lamar dancers, Kellie Stockton accepts a prize at the Cancer Dance-a-thon. The dancers won first place in the dance competition and second in the poster contest, adding to the long list of Lamar's triumphs.

Moments to recall

Individuality was a trait that seemed to characterize Lamar. Everyone did his or her own thing, however, some did it better. Winners were everywhere not only in sports, but in academics as well.

Two students, Hiram Jackson and Rob Allibon were chosen to represent Lamar at All-State Orchestra, while Susan Spore represented the band at All-State.

Six National Ment Finalists were selected from Lamar, along with 17 commended students.

UIL competition also brought some students into the limelight. Thirteen students traveled to Lubbock for Regional meet with three, Donnie Frazier, Suzanne Seifert and Cloyce Stetson advancing to the state level.

But for most, the memorable events weren't so noteworthy. These were the times that friends got together just to talk and have fun. Or maybe it was finally making a 100 on a popquiz in government or getting up enough courage to give blood during the blood drive.

Some students will remember staying out all night partying at the Hilton after Prom or getting an hour and a half lunch period during finals.

The big moments for some may have been something really small, like hearing your favorite song on the radio or being the first in line at McDonald's at lunch.

But for most, the best times came at the end of the year, whether it was finally moving the tassel over to the right side or simply saying good-bye to old friends. These were the times to remember, these were the GREAT MOMENTS.

Goofing around, Doug Groff, Mike Mateja. Steve Fisher and Greg McQuitty enjoy the halftime activities. The times spent with good friends will be some of the most memorable for almost everyone.

Enjoying summer band practice, Vicki Lantvit, Karen McClinuc, Christ Cummings and Robert Woefel take time out from learning a new drill. Band, drill team, choir and other activities provided an entire group of friends and plenty of things to do.

Leading the crowd, senior guys serve as honorary Vi-Queens at a pep rally. The pep rallies on Friday mornings were a tradition kept throughout the years.

Arm in arm, two graduates head for Texas Hall. For many, Graduation was an apprehensive time, for they were leaving behind the security of high school and heading into the unknown.

Today's minute, tomorrow's memory

Singing together, band members, chort members and exes join in the Alma Mater. No matter what the occasion - from pep ralhes to Graduation - the feeling of pride that ran through the crowd when this song was sung was an unmistakable "great moment" in the hearts of many Vikings.
